[< AS. don. In part < AS. dugan, suit.]

Syn.: accomplish, achieve, actualize, bring about, bring to pass, carry out, carry through, commit, complete, consummate, discharge, effect, execute, finish, fulfil, perform, perpetrate, realize, transact, work out. Do is the one comprehensive word which includes this whole class. We may say of the least item of daily work, "It is done," and of the grandest human achievement, "Well done!" To discharge is to do what is given in charge, expected, or required; we may say to do or to discharge one's duty, the duty or duties of one's office, station, position, etc., where discharge is the more formal and technical word, signifying to perform to the last and utmost all that is required. Commit, as applied to actions, is used only of those that are bad, whether grave or trivial; perpetrate is used chiefly of aggravated crimes, or, somewhat humorously, of blunders. A man may commit a sin, a trespass, or a murder; perpetrate an outrage or a felony. Perform is used generally in a good sense; as, to perform a task, a duty, a service, etc. Compare PERFORM, under ACCOMPLISH. We finish a garment or a letter, complete an edifice or a life-work, consummate a bargain or a crime, discharge a duty, effect a purpose, execute a command, fulfil a promise, perform our daily tasks, realize an ideal, accomplish a design, achieve a victory. dog-mat′ic, 1 deg-mat′ik; 2 dŏg-măt′ĭc, a. 1. Marked by positive and authoritative assertion. 2. Like or pertaining to dogma. dog-mat′i-cal‡.

Syn.: arrogant, authoritative, dictatorial, doctrinal, domineering, imperious, magisterial, opinionated, overbearing, positive, self-opinionated, systematic. Dogmatic is technically applied in a good sense to that which is formally enunciated by adequate authority; doctrinal to that which is stated in the form of doctrine to be taught or defended. Dogmatic theology, called also "dogmatics," gives definite propositions, which it holds to be delivered by authority; systematic theology considers the same propositions in their logical connection and order as parts of a system; a doctrinal statement is less absolute in its claims than a dogmatic treatise, and may be less complete than the term systematic would imply. Outside of theology, dogmatic has generally an offensive sense; a dogmatic statement is one for which the author does not trouble himself to give a reason, either because of the strength of his convictions, or because of his contempt for those whom he addresses; thus dogmatic is, in common use, allied with arrogant and kindred words. See ABSOLUTE; IMPERIOUS.

doubt[2], } hold as uncertain. 2. To be apprehensive of; fear; suspect; distrust. II. i. To be in doubt. [< L.[F] dubito, be uncertain.]

Syn.: distrust, mistrust, surmise, suspect. To doubt is to lack conviction. Incompleteness of evidence may compel one to doubt, or some perverse bias of mind may incline him to. Distrust may express simply a lack of confidence; as, I distrust my own judgment; or it may be nearly equivalent to suspect; as, I distrusted that man from the start. Mistrust and suspect imply that one is almost assured of positive evil; one may distrust himself or others; he suspects others. Mistrust is now rarely, if ever, used of persons, but only of motives, intentions, etc. Distrust is always serious: mistrust is often used playfully. To doubt is properly followed by that; as, "I don't doubt that he saw me," or "I have no doubt that," etc. Doubt but, doubt but that, and doubt but what are incorrect expressions. Compare DOUBT, n.; QUESTION; SUPPOSE.—Ant.: believe, confide in, depend on, depend upon, rely on, rely upon, trust.—doubt'a-bl(e[2], a.—doubt'er, n. One who doubts.

doubt, n. 1. Lack of certain knowledge; uncertainty. 2. A matter or case of dubitation; indecision. 3. A question requiring settlement; an objection. 4†. Fear; dread.

Syn.: disbelief, distrust, hesitancy, hesitation, incredulity, indecision, irresolution, misgiving, perplexity, question, scruple, skepticism, suspense, suspicion, unbelief, uncertainty. Doubt is lack of conviction; disbelief is conviction to the contrary; unbelief refers to a settled state of mind, generally accompanied with opposition of heart. Perplexity is active and painful; doubt may be quiescent. Perplexity presses toward a solution; doubt may be content to linger unresolved. Any improbable statement awakens incredulity. In theological usage, unbelief and skepticism have a condemnatory force, as implying wilful rejection of manifest truth. As regards practical matters, uncertainty applies to the unknown or undecided; doubt implies some negative evidence. Suspense regards the future, and is eager and anxious; uncertainty may relate to any period, and be quite indifferent. Misgiving is ordinarily in regard to the outcome of something already done or decided: hesitation, indecision, and irresolution have reference to something that remains to be decided or done and are due oftener to infirmity of will than to lack of knowledge. Distrust and suspicion apply especially to the motives, character, etc., of others, and are more decidedly adverse than doubt. Scruple relates to matters of conscience and duty. See PERPLEXITY; QUESTION.—Ant.: assurance, belief, certainty, confidence, conviction, decision, determination, persuasion, resolution, resolve.

Syn.: allure, attract, drag, entice, haul, incline, induce, lead, lure, pull, tow, tug. One object draws another when it moves it toward itself or in the direction of its own motion by the exertion of adequate force, whether slight or powerful. To attract is to exert a force that tends to draw, while it may produce no actual motion; all objects are attracted toward the earth, but they may be sustained from falling. To drag is to draw against strong resistance: as, to drag a sled over bare ground, or a carriage up a steep hill. To pull is to exert a drawing force, whether adequate or inadequate; as, the fish pulls on the line; a dentist pulls a tooth. To tug is to draw, or try to draw, a resisting object with a continuous straining motion; as, to tug at the oar. To haul is to draw somewhat slowly a heavy object; as, to haul a seine; to haul logs. One vessel tows another. In the figurative sense, attract is more nearly akin to incline, draw to induce. We are attracted by one's appearance, drawn to his side. See ACTUATE; ALLURE; INFLUENCE.—Ant.: alienate, estrange, rebuff, reject, repel, repulse. See synonyms for DRIVE.

Syn.: day-dream, fancy, fantasy, hallucination, illusion, reverie, romance, trance, vision. A dream is strictly a train of thoughts, fantasies, and images passing through the mind during sleep; a vision may occur when one is awake and in clear exercise of the senses and mental powers; vision is often applied to something seen by the mind through supernatural agency, whether in sleep or wakefulness, conceived as more real and authoritative than a dream; a trance is an abnormal state, which is different from normal sleep or wakefulness. A reverie is a purposeless drifting of the mind when awake, under the influence of mental images; a day-dream that which passes before the mind in such condition. A fancy is some image presented to the mind, often in the fullest exercise of its powers. Hallucination is the seeming perception of non-existent objects, as in insanity or delirium. In the figurative sense, we speak of dreams of fortune, visions of glory, with little difference of meaning except that the vision is thought of as fuller and more vivid. We speak of a trance of delight when the emotion almost sweeps one away from the normal exercise of the faculties. Compare DELUSION.—Ant.: certainty, fact, reality, realization, substance, verity.

Syn.: apparel, array, attire, clothes, clothing, costume, garb, garments, habiliments, habit, raiment, robes, uniform, vestments, vesture. Clothing denotes the entire covering of the body, taken as a whole; clothes and garments view it as composed of separate parts. Clothes, clothing, and garments may be used of inner or outer covering; all the other words in the list (with possible rare exceptions in the case of raiment) refer to the outer garments. Array, raiment, and vesture are archaic or poetic; so, too, is habit, except in technical use to denote a lady's riding-dress. The word vestments is now rare, except in ecclesiastical use. Apparel and attire are most frequently used of somewhat complete and elegant outer clothing, but Shakespeare speaks of "poor and mean attire." Dress may be used, specifically, for a woman's gown, and in that sense may be either rich or shabby; but in the general sense it denotes outer clothing which is meant to be elegant, complete, and appropriate to some social or public occasion; as, full dress, court dress, evening dress, etc. Dress has now largely displaced apparel and attire. Garb denotes the clothing characteristic of some class, profession, or the like; as, the garb of a priest. Costume is chiefly used for that which befits an assumed character; as, a theatrical costume; we sometimes speak of a national costume, etc. See HABIT.—Ant.: bareness, disarray, dishabille, exposure, nakedness, nudity, undress.—dress coat, a coat for evening wear, having the skirts cut away over the hips.—dress'-goods", n. pl. Fabrics for women's and children's dresses: often colloquially as a singular.—dress'-mak"er, n. One who makes dresses for women or children.—dress'mak"ing, n.—dress'y, a. [Colloq.] 1. Fond of dress. 2. Showy; elegant.—dress'i-ness, n.

[< AS. drīfan.]

Syn.: compel, impel, propel, push, repel, repulse, resist, ride, thrust, urge on. To drive is to move an object with some force or violence before or away from oneself: it is the direct reverse of draw, lead, etc. A man leads a horse by the halter, drives him with whip and rein. One may be driven to a thing or from it; hence, drive is a synonym equally for compel or for repel or repulse. Repulse is stronger and more conclusive than repel; one may be repelled by the very aspect of the person whose favor he seeks, but is not repulsed except by the direct refusal or ignoring of his suit. It is common to speak of driving in a carriage, riding upon a horse; tho in Scripture we read of riding in a chariot (2 Kings ix, 16; Jer. xvii, 25, etc.); good examples of the same usage may be found abundantly in the older English. Many good authorities use ride in the older and broader sense as signifying to be supported and borne along by any means of conveyance. Compare ACTUATE; BANISH; COMPEL; INFLUENCE; PUSH; THROW.—Ant.: see synonyms for DRAW.—drive'-bolt", n. 1. A tool for driving bolts home. 2. A bolt used to drive out another bolt. SYN.: accountability, business, function, obligation, office, responsibility, right, righteousness. Etymologically, duty is that which is owed or due; obligation, that to or by which one is bound; right, that which is correct, straight, or in the direct line of truth and goodness; responsibility, that for which one must answer. Duty and responsibility are thought of as to some person or persons: right is impersonal. One's duty may be to others or to himself; his obligations and responsibilities are to others. Duty arises from the nature of things; obligation and responsibility may be created by circumstances, as by one's own promise, or by the acceptance of a trust, etc. We speak of a parent's duty, a debtor's obligation; or of a child's duty of obedience, and a parent's responsibility for the child's welfare. Right is that which accords with the moral system of the universe. Righteousness is right incarnated in action. In a more limited sense, right may be used of what one may rightly claim, and so be the converse of duty. It is the creditor's right to demand payment, and the debtor's duty to pay. Compare BUSINESS; TAX; VIRTUE.—du'te-ous, a. Rendering due respect and obedience; dutiful. -ly, adv. -ness, n.—du'ti-a-bl(e)r, *a. Roman.	Black Letter.	Script.	Revised Scientific.

E, e, 1 ɪ; 2 e, n. [EES, E's, or Es, 1 ɪz; 2 ēs, pl.] 1. The fifth letter in the English alphabet; also, its sound. It is derived from the Latin, which adopted it from the Greek, whence it came from the Phenician and ultimately probably from the Egyptian. Its modern English name is the first syllable of even. In the other languages which use the Roman alphabet its name rimes with may, this being its original 'long' sound. The letter 'e' is silent when initial before 'u,' as in eugenics, eulogy, euphony, etc.; when medial, as in forearm, forecast, foreign; also when final following a consonant at the end of a syllable, as in bade, curse, dime, dome, done, purse, vice, vise. The letter 'e' is now used for the following sounds: (1) open short 'e' as in met; half-long in bend. (2) close long 'e' (with the help of 'i'or 'y'), as in veil, they; somewhat more open in their. (3) high close 'i,' as in he, equal, and (with the help of silent 'e') in mete. (4) ə in over, moment; very weak in sadden, battle. (5) ɪ in report. It enters into some digraphs, which denote simple sounds, as in beat, beet, either, believe, people, feud, chew. See INTRODUCTION.

2. A symbol noting: (1) The fifth in a class, order, group, or series; five as a number or numeral. (2) Mus. The third tone in the natural scale (C) and the fifth in the relative minor scale (A minor).

Syn.: breeding, cultivation, culture, development, discipline, information, instruction, knowledge, learning, nurture, reading, schooling, study, teaching, training, tuition. Education (L. educere, to lead or draw out) is the systematic development and cultivation of the mind and other natural powers. Education is the harmonious development of all our faculties. It begins in the nursery, and goes on at school, but does not end there. It continues through life, whether we will or not. Instruction, the impartation of knowledge by others (L. instruere, to build in or into), is but a part of education, often the smallest part. Teaching is the more familiar and less formal word for instruction. Training refers not merely to the impartation of knowledge, but to the exercising of one in actions with the design to form habits. Discipline is systematic and rigorous training, with the idea of subjection to authority and perhaps of punishment. Tuition is the technical term for teaching as the business of an instructor or as in the routine of a school: tuition is narrower than teaching, not, like the latter word, including training. We speak of the teaching, training, or discipline, rather than of the education or tuition of a dog or a horse. Compare KNOWLEDGE; LEARNING; NURTURE; REFINEMENT; WISDOM.—Ant.: ignorance, illiteracy. Compare synonyms for IGNORANT.

ef-fect', 1 e-fekt'; 2 ĕ-fĕct', vt. 1. To bring about; bring to an issue or to full success; cause; produce. 2. To achieve; accomplish.' [< L. effectus, pp. of efficio, < ex, out, + facio, do.]

Syn.: accomplish, achieve, carry out, carry through, close, complete, conclude, consummate, do, end, execute, finish, fulfil, make effective, perform, produce, put in action, put in (or into) effect, put in operation, put through, realize, set in motion. Effect, execute, consummate, and realize all signify to embody in fact what was before in thought. One may realize that which he has done nothing to bring about; he may realize the dreams of youth by inheriting a fortune; but he can not effect his early designs except by doing the utmost that is necessary to make them fact. Effect includes all that is done to accomplish the intent; execute refers rather to the final steps; consummate is limited quite sharply to the concluding act. Care must be taken to distinguish between effect and affect. An officer executes the law when he proceeds against its violators; a purchase is consummated when the money is paid and the property delivered. Execute refers more commonly to the commands of another, effect and consummate to one's own designs; as, the commander effected the capture of the fort, because his officers and men promptly executed his commands. See ACCOMPLISH; DO; FINISH; MAKE.

ef-fi'cient, 1 e-fish'ent; 2 ĕ-fish'ĕnt, a. 1. Acting or having power to act, effectually; competent; as, an efficient leader. 2. Productive of effects; causative. [< L. efficien(t-)s, ppr. of efficio; see EFFECT.]

Syn.: effective, effectual, efficacious. That is effective which accomplishes an intended effect with emphasis, decision, and certainty; that is effectual which acts with such finality as to leave no more to be done. Effective measures will put an effectual stop to objectionable proceedings. That is efficient which is thought of as acting or capable of acting continuously, and with energy equal to any demand; thus, an efficient cause is an agency from the action of which an effect necessarily and certainly follows. That is efficacious which is thought of as having power, which may be active or may continue latent, to produce an effectual result; as, a medicine efficacious against fever. A person may be said to be efficient in general character or action; as, an efficient business man; he may be called effective in some special relation; as, an effective speaker; the efficient person is habitually energetic, industrious, sagacious, and alert; a man may be an effective speaker on occasion who is not efficient in ordinary life. Efficacious and effectual are not used of persons.—Ant.: awkward, dull, feckless, feeble, fruitless, idle, ineffective, ineffectual, inefficacious, inefficient, inoperative, negligent, powerless, remiss, unavailing, useless, vain.

—ef-fi'cien-cy, n. 1. The character of being efficient; effectiveness. 2. Mech. The ratio of effect produced to the energy expended. ef-fi'ciencɛ†. Syn.: see ABILITY; POWER.—ef-fi'-cient-ly, adv.

ef-front'er-y, } 1 e-frunt'ėr-ı; 2 ef-frunt'er-y², ∫ ē-frŏnt'er-y, n. [-ER-IES², pl.] Insolent assurance; audacity; impudence. [< L.² ex, out, + frons (frŏnt-)s, forehead.]

Syn.: assurance, audacity, boldness, brass, hardihood, impudence, insolence, shamelessness. Audacity, in the sense here considered, is a reckless defiance of law, decency, public opinion, or personal rights, claims, or views, approaching the meaning of impudence or shamelessness, but always carrying the thought of the personal risk that one disregards in such defiance; the merely impudent or shameless person may take no thought of consequences; the audacious person recognizes and recklessly braves them. Hardihood defies and disregards the rational judgment of men. Effrontery (L. effrons, barefaced, shameless) adds to audacity and hardihood the special element of defiance of considerations of propriety, duty, and respect for others, yet not to the extent implied in impudence or shamelessness. Impudence disregards what is due to superiors: shamelessness defies decency. Boldness is forward-stepping courage, spoken of with reference to the presence and observation of others; boldness, in the good sense, is courage viewed from the outside; but the word is frequently used in an unfavorable sense to indicate a lack of proper sensitiveness and modesty. Compare ASSURANCE; BRAVE; IMPUDENCE.—Ant.: bashfulness, coyness, diffidence, modesty, sensitiveness, shrinking, shyness, timidity.

See ELECTRON; PROTON.—e. eel, a gymnonotous fish (Electrophorus electricus) of Brazil, having an eel-like naked body and an electrical apparatus in the tail.—e. energy, the power possessed by electricity for doing work.—e. fish, any fish having organs capable of imparting an electric shock, as an electric eel.—e. light, a light produced by electricity.—e. machine. 1. An apparatus for generating static electricity, as by friction. 2. A dynamo.—e. motor, a machine for transforming electric energy into mechanical power: opposed to dynamo.—e. ray, a fish, the torpedo.—e-lec'tri-cal-ly, adv. By or as by means of electricity.—e-lec-tri'cian, n. 1. One versed in the science of electricity. 2. An inventor, maker or repairer of electrical apparatus.

e-lec-tric'i-ty, 1 ı-lek-tris'ı-tı; 2 ē-lēc-trīç'ı-tı, n. 1. A material agency which, when in motion (dynamic electricity), exhibits magnetic, chemical, and thermal effects, and when at rest (static electricity) is accompanied by an interplay of forces between associated localities in which it is present.

Recent investigations indicate that it is discrete or granular in nature, and that there may be two kinds, positive and negative. In general its effects differ according as it is at rest or in motion. 2. Physics. That branch of science that treats of this agency and the phenomena caused by it. [< L. electrum, < Gr. ēlektron, amber.]

e-lec'tri-cute, 1 ı-lek'trı-kiūt; 2 e-lec'trī-cūt, vt. To put to death by electricity. e-lec'tro-cute‡.—elec'tri-cu'er, n.—e-lec'tri- [or -tro-]cu'tion, n.

e-lec'tri-fy, 1 ı-lek'trı-fai; 2 ē-lēc'tri-fȳ, v. [-FIED; -FY'ING.] I. t. 1. To act upon or charge with electricity. 2. To apply electricity to as a motive power; as, to electrify a railroad. 3. To arouse; startle; thrill. II. i. To become electric.—e-lec'tri-fi"a-bl(e", a.—e-lec"tri-fi-ca'tion, n. The process of electrifying, or the state of being electrified.—e-lec'tri-fi"er, n.

e-lec'trine, 1 ı-lek'trın; 2 ē-lēc'trin. I. a. 1. Made of electrum. 2. Made of or related to amber. II. n. An imaginary substance, supposed by some to be the basis of electricity. [< Gr. ēlektrinos, < ēlektron, amber.]

e-lec'trize, 1 ı-lek'traiz; 2 ē-lēc'trīz, vt. [-TRIZED; -TRIZ-ING.] To charge with, act upon, or excite by or as by electricity; electrify. [< L. electrum; see ELECTRUM.] e-lec'trise‡.—e-lec"tri-za'tion, n.—e-lec'triz-er, n. One who or that which electrizes; usually, an apparatus for therapeutic electrifying.

e-lec'tro, 1 ı-lek'tro; 2 ē-lēc'tro, vt. [Colloq. or Trade.] To make an electrotype of; electroplate.

e-lec'tro, n. [Colloq. or Trade.] 1. An electrotype. 2. Electroplating. [Abbr. of ELECTROTYPE.]

e-lec'tro-, 1 ı-lek'tro-; 2 ē-lēc'tro-. From Greek elektron, amber; a combining form representing electric in composition.—e-lec'tro-bus, n. An omnibus driven by electricity.—e-lec"tro-cap"il-lar'i-ty, n. The property of exhibiting electrocapillary phenomena.—e-lec"tro-car'di-o-gram, n. Med. A graph or telegram of the electromotive condition of the heart.—e-lec"tro-chem'is-try, n. The branch of chemistry that treats of electricity as active in effecting chemical change.—e-lec"tro-chem'i-cal, a.—e-lec"tro-chem'i-cal-ly, adv.—e-lec"tro-chem'ist, n.—e-lec'tro-cute, etc. See ELECTRICUTE.—e-lec'trode, n. Either of the two poles of an electric battery or dynamo; an anode or a cathode.—e-lec"tro-de-pos'it. I. vt. To deposit chemically, as metal from a solution, by means of an electric current. II. n. That which is so deposited.—e-lec"tro-dep"o-si'tion, n. The process of electrodepositing.—e-lec"tro-dy-nam'ic, a. Relating to forces of attraction and repulsion, produced by electric currents.—e-lec"tro-dy-nam'ics, n. The branch of physics treating of electric currents, induction, etc.—e-lec"tro-dy"na-mom'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring the strength of an electric current, as by the interaction of two wire coils.—e-lec'tro-graph, 1 ı-lek'tro-graf; 2 ē-lēc'tro-grāf, n. 1. The linear record of an electromotor. 2. An apparatus for tracing a design to be electro-etched for use in printing wall-paper, calico, etc. 3. A telautograph. 4. An X-ray skiagraph. 5. A biograph employing the arc light.—e-lec"tro-graph'ic, a.—e-lec"trog'ra-phy, n.—e-lec"tro-ki-net'ic, a. Pertaining to or caused by electricity in motion.—e-lec"tro-ki-net'ics, n. That branch of electrical science which treats of the motion of electricity and the forces producing or regulating it: opposed to electrostatics.

e-lec"tro-lier', 1 ı-lek"tro-lir'; 2 ē-lēc"tro-lēr', n. A fixture for holding electric lamps: not a good form.

e-lec-trol'y-sis, 1 ı-lek-trel'ı-sis; 2 ē-lēc-trŏl'y-sis, n. 1. The decomposing of a chemical compound by passing an electric current through it. 2. Decomposition so effected.—e-lec'tro-lyte, n. A chemical compound decomposable by an electric current, as sodium hydroxid, copper sulphate, etc.—e-lec"tro-lyt'ic, a. Relating to or of the nature of electrolysis or an electrolyte.—e-lec"tro-lyt'i-cal‡.—electrolytic refining, the refining of metals by electrolysis.—e-lec"tro-lyt'i-cal-ly, adv.—e-lec'tro-lyze, vt. To decompose by electric current.—e-lec"tro-ly-za'tion, n.—e-lec'tro-lyz"er, n.—e-lec"tro-mag'net, n. A core of soft iron or the like, which temporarily becomes a magnet during the passage of an electric current through a coil of wire surrounding it.—e-lec"tro-mag-net'ic, a.—e-lec"tro-mag'net-ism, n. 1. Magnetism developed by electricity. 2. That science which treats of the relations between electricity and magnetism and the phenomena due to these relations. e-lec"tro-mag-net'ics‡.—e-lec"tro-met'al-lur"gy, n. The art or science of electrolytically depositing metals, or of separating them from their ores or alloys by electrolysis.—e-lec"tro-met"al-lur'gi-cal, a.—e-lec"tro-met'al-lur"gist, n.—e-lec-trom'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring an electric current.—e-lec"tro-met'ric, e-lec"tro-met'ri-cal, a. Pertaining to electrometry.—e-lec-trom'e-try, n. The science or art of making electrical measurements.

e-lec"tro-mo'tion, 1 ı-lek"tro-mō'shən; 2 ē-lēc"tro-mō'shon, n. 1. The passage of an electric current in a voltaic circuit. 2. Mech. Motion produced by electricity employed as power.

e-lec"tro-mo'tive(e⁸, 1 ı-lek"tro-mō'tıv; 2 ē-lēc"tro-mō'tiv, a. Producing, or tending to produce electricity; producing or produced by electromotion.—electromotive force, that which determines the flow of electricity from one point to another; difference of potential: abbreviated E. M. F.—e. series, an arrangement of the metals in series, in which each metal precipitates out of aqueous solution the metals following it, and is itself precipitated by those that precede it. The alkali metals (potassium, sodium, etc.) stand at the head of the series, and silver, platinum, and gold at the end.

e-lec"tro-mo'tor, n. 1. An electric motor. 2. Any electric source, as a voltaic cell.

e-lec'tron, 1 ı-lek'tron; 2 ē-lēc'trŏn, n. 1. Physics. An electrically charged particle which is a component of the atom and of matter; a corpuscle; a particle of negative electricity. An electron has a mass about one-seventeen hundredth ($^1/_{1700}$) of that of an atom of hydrogen or about one-eighteen hundredth ($^1/_{1800}$) of that of a proton. Electrons are projected from the cathode of a vacuum tube as cathode rays. 2. Same as ELECTRUM.—e-lec-tron'ic, a.—e-lec"tro-neg'a-tiv(e⁸, a. I. a. 1. Appearing, as an element in electrolysis, at the positive electrode. 2. Having the property of becoming negatively electrified by contact with or the chemical action of another substance. II. n. An electronegative element.—e-lec-trop'a-thy, n.—The treatment of disease by means of electricity.—e-lec"tro-path'ic, a.—e-lec"tro-phor'e-sis, n. The slow movement of particles with or against the positive current when the wires from a battery are immersed in a colloidal suspension.—e-lec-troph'o-rus, n. An instrument for generating static electricity by induction: commonly a flat disk of resin, to which may be applied another of wood coated with tin-foil. e-lec'tro-phore‡.

e-lec'tro-plate, 1 ı-lek'tro-plēt; 2 ē-lēc'tro-plāt, vt. To coat with metal by electro-deposition. The object to be plated is placed in a solution of a salt of the metal in connection with the negative pole of a battery or dynamo.—e-lec'tro-plate, n. An electroplated article.—e-lec'tro-pla'ting, n. 1. The act or process of depositing metal by electric means. 2. The coat of metal deposited by this process.

e-lec"tro-pol'on, 1 ı-lek'tro-pel'on; 2 ē-lēc'tro-pŏl'ŏn, n. An excitant liquid for an electric battery, composed of potassium dichromate, sulfuric acid, and water. e-lec"tro-pol'on fluid‡.

e-lec'tro-pos'i-tiv(e⁸. I. a. 1. Appearing at the negative electrode: said of an element in electrolysis. 2. Having the property of becoming positively electrified by contact or chemical action. II. n. An electropositive element.

e-lec'tro-scope, n. An instrument for detecting the presence of electricity upon a conductor by the repulsion of pith-balls or strips of gold-leaf.—e-lec"tro-scop'ic, a.

Condensing Electroscope. a, insulated handle for removing upper plate; b, gold-leaf; c, metallic poles connecting with an electric source.

e-lec'tro-stat'ic, n. That branch of electrical science which treats of the phenomena of electricity at rest or of frictional electricity.—e-lec"tro-stat'ic, a. e-lec"tro-stat'i-cal‡.—e-lec"tro-stat'i-cal-ly, adv.—e-lec"tro-tax'is, n. Biol. That property of protoplasm which makes it susceptible to the influence of an electric stimulus, as shown by the direction of movement; also, any similar property in simple organisms.—e-lec"tro-tac'tic, a.—e-lec"tro-tech'nics, n. The science of the methods, processes, and operations by which electricity is applied in the industrial arts.—e-lec"tro-tech'nic, e-lec"tro-tech'ni-cal, a.—e-lec"tro-te-leg'ra-phy, n. Telegraphy by electricity.—e-lec"tro-tel"e-graph'ic, a.—e-lec'tro-ther"a-peu'tics, n. The treatment of disease by electricity, or the laws, etc., of such treatment. e-lec"tro-ther'a-py‡.—e-lec"tro-ther"a-peu'tic, -ti-cal, a.—e-lec"tro-ton'ic, a. 1. Of or relating to electric tenson. 2. Of or relating to or caused by electrotonus.—e-lec-trot'o-nus, n. The change in the activity of a nerve or muscle induced by a voltaic current.

e-lec'tro-type, n. 1. A metallic copy of any surface, as a coin, made by electric deposition, especially one of a page of type for printing. 2. An impression from an electrotyped cut. 3. The process of electrotyping; electrotypy.—e-lec'tro-type, vt.—e-lec'tro-typ"er, n. 1. One who electrotypes. e-lec"tro-typ'ic‡. 2. [Eng.] The bath holding the electrotyping solution.—e-lec"tro-typ'ic, a. Pertaining to or made by electrotyping.—e-lec"tro-typ'ing, n. The act or business of forming electrotypes.—e-lec"tro-typ'y, n. The process or art of electrotyping.

e-lec'trum, 1 ı-lek'trum; 2 ē-lēc'trŭm, n. 1. German silver or other like alloy. 2. Anciently, amber. e-lec'tron‡. 3. Native gold containing a large percentage of silver. [L., < Gr. ēlektron, amber.]

e-lec'tu-a-ry, 1 ı-lek'chu-[or -tiu-]ē-rı; 2 ē-lēc'chu-[or -tŭ-]ā-ry, n. [-RIES², pl.] A confection made by incorporating a medicine with some sweet substance. [< LL. electuarium, < Gr. ekleikton, < ek, out, + leichō, lick.]

el"e-e-mos'y-na-ry, 1 el"ı-ı-mos'ı-nē-rı; 2 ĕl"e-e-mŏs'y-nā-ry. I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to charity or alms; existing for the relief of the poor; charitable; gratuitous; as, eleemosynary institutions. 2. Aided by or dependent upon charity; as, the eleemosynary classes. II. n. [-RIES², pl.] A recipient of charity. [< Gr. eleēmosynē; see ALMS.]

el'e-gant, 1 el'ı-gant; 2 ĕl'e-gant, a. 1. Marked by refinement, grace, or symmetry; as of action, form or structure; also, possessing or exhibiting refined taste. 2. Possessing a fine sense of beauty or fitness. 3. [Colloq.] (1) Excellent; capital. (2) Marked by completeness and simplicity; appropriate; as, an elegant argument. [OF., < L. elegan(t-)s, < eligo, see ELECT.]

Syn.: dainty, exquisite. Elegant (Latin elegans, select) refers to the lighter, finer elements of beauty in form or motion, but is often misused as a general term of approval. A dress may be elegant, but such expressions as "an elegant field of corn," "an elegant ride," or "an elegant time" are glaring lexical improprieties. Exquisite denotes the utmost perfection of the elegant in minute details; we speak of an elegant garment, an exquisite lace. Exquisite is also applied to intense keenness of any feeling; as, exquisite delight; exquisite pain. Dainty, at its best, applies to what is at once slight, delicate, and pleasing; in its extreme use, it may apply to sensibilities or feelings too delicate for the demands of practical life, over-nice, squeamish. See BEAUTIFUL; CHOICE; FINE; POLITE.—Ant.: common, coarse, harsh, rude.

—el'e-gant-ly, adv.—el'e-gance, n. 1. The state or quality of being elegant or refined. 2. Anything elegant. el'e-gan-cy‡ [-CIES², pl.]. Syn.: see POLITENESS.

e-le'gi-ac, 1 ı-lī'jı-ak or el'ı-jī'ak; 2 e-lē'ǧi-ăc or ĕl"e-ǧī'ăc. I. a. 1. Pertaining to elegies. 2. Of the nature of an elegy; sad; plaintive. 3. Anc. Pros. Written in the meter of elegy. el"e-gi'a-cal‡. II. n. 1. A poet who writes in the tone or in the meter of the elegy. 2. pl. Verse composed in the elegiac spirit or form.

e-le'git, 1 ı-lī'jıt; 2 e-lē'ǧit, n. [L.] Law. 1. A writ of execution, issued on the election of a judgment creditor, directing the sheriff to turn over to him the debtor's attachable goods, and, if these be insufficient, half the debtor's land, the latter to be held till the rents and profits shall extinguish the debt. 2. The right secured by this writ.

el'e-gy, 1 el'ı-jı; 2 ĕl'e-ǧy, n. [-GIES², pl.] 1. A funeral song; a meditative poem with sorrowful theme. 2. A classical poem written in elegiac verse. [< Gr. elegeia, < elegos, mourning song.]—el'e-gist, n. A writer of elegies.

e-le'gi-ast‡; el"e-gi-og'ra-pher‡.—el'e-gize, v. [-GIZED; -GIZ"ING.] I. t. To compose an elegy on; lament. II. i. To write in elegiac verse or style.

el'e-ment, 1 el'ı-mėnt or -mənt; 2 ĕl'e-ment, n. 1. A component or essential part; especially, a simple part of anything complex; a constituent; ingredient. 2. pl. (1) First principles or fundamental ideas; rudiments. (2) The bread and wine of the Lord's Supper. 3. An ultimate and essential principle in the make-up of anything; essential constituent; anciently, one of the substances—earth, air, fire, and water—supposed to make up all things: still in popular use; as, the fury of the elements; the devouring element. 4. The natural sphere or environment; as, the element of fishes is water. 5. Chem. That form of matter which can not be decomposed or formed by any means known to science; as, gold, silver, iron, etc. There are more than eighty recognized elements. 6. Biol. One of the primary parts of an organism; also, a cell or morphological unit. 7. Math. (1) One of a number of parts composing a symmetrical whole; one of the geometrical forms or data which together compose a figure, as a line, a point, a plane, a space; in calculus, an infinitely small portion of a magnitude; a generatrix. (2) A term in an algebraic expression. 8. Elec. One of the dissimilar substances in a voltaic cell or battery, etc. [< L. elementum, first principle.] Syn.: see PART; PARTICLE.—el"e-men'tal, a. 1. Of or pertaining to an element or elements; hence, pure; primary. (1) Pertaining to material elements; as, elemental action. (2) Pertaining to rudiments or first principles; rudimentary; as, elemental education. 2. Chem. Elementary. 3. Forming a necessary part or ingredient; as, an elemental salt. -ly, adv.—el"e-men'ta-ry, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or being an element or elements, in any sense. 2. Treating of the first principles of anything; rudimental; as, an elemental analysis. 3. Math. Having the nature of an infinitesimal part.—el"e-men'ta-ri-ly, adv. In a simple or elementary manner.—el"e-men'ta-ri-ness, n.

el'e-mi, 1 el'ı-mı; 2 ĕl'e-mi, n. Any one of several gum resins. [Prob. of Ar. orig.]

e-len'chus, 1 ı-leŋ'kus; 2 e-lĕŋ'cŭs, n. [-CHI, 1 -kaı; 2 -ĕ, pl.] Logic. 1. The contradictory opposite of a proposition; that which must be proved in order to refute an opponent; hence, a refuting argument; a refutation. 2. A false refutation; sophism. 3. [Rare.] An analytical table of contents; explanatory notes. [< L. elenchus, < Gr. elenchos, < elenchō, disgrace, confute.]

e-lench't.—e-len'chic, a. Having the nature or effect of an elenchus; refutatory. e-len'chi-cal‡; e-lench'tic‡; e-lench'ti-cal‡; e-lenc'tic‡; e-lenc'ti-cal‡.

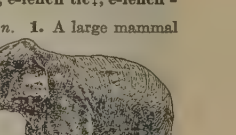
el'e-phant, 1 el'ı-fant; 2 ĕl'e-fant, n. 1. A large mammal of Africa, the largest of existing land-animals, having a flexible proboscis and the upper incisors developed as tusks. 2. Fig., something unwieldy, burdensome, or hard to dispose of. [< Gr. elephas, < Heb. eleph, ox.]—elephant's-ear, n. Any one of certain plants of the genus Begonia, with large one-sided heavy ear-like leaves.—elephant's-foot, n. 1. Any one of various erect hairy weeds of the genus Elephantopus. 2. A South-African plant (Testudinaria elephantipes) of the yam family, having a conical corm-like stem covered with a bark-like substance which, becoming deeply cracked, forms large angular protuberances like those on the shell of a tortoise, whence the name also of tortoise-plant; often cultivated in greenhouses. See HOTTENTOT'S-BREAD under HOTTENTOT.—el"e-phan'tine, a. Pertaining to an elephant; enormous; unwieldy.



Asiatic Elephant. 1/108

el"e-phan-ti'a-sis, 1 el"ı-fan-taı'ə-sis; 2 ĕl"e-făn-tī'a-sis, n. Pathol. A chronic disease of the skin, characterized by an enormous enlargement of the part affected, usually the legs, and the hardening of the skin. [L., < Gr. elephantiasis, < elephas, ELEPHANT.]

El"eu-sin'i-a, 1 el"yu-sin'ı-ə; 2 ĕl"yu-sin'i-a, n. pl. The Athenian festival and mysteries in honor of Demeter and Persephone, at Eleusis, near Athens. [Gr.] Eleusinian mysteries‡.

El"eu-sin'i-an, a. Of or pertaining to Eleusis or the Eleusinia.—Eleusinian mysteries, the secret religious rites, which were probably originated by the Thracians at Eleusis and later absorbed by the Athenian state religion.

E-leu'sis, 1 ı-lū'sis; 2 e-lū'sis, n. 1. Gr. Myth. Son of Mercury. 2. A city in Attica. See ELEUSINIA.

El"eu-the'ri-a, 1 el"yu-thī'rı-ə; 2 ĕl"yu-thē'ri-a, n. Gr. Antiq. A festival kept by the Greeks after the battle of Platæa in honor of Zeus Eleutherios (the Deliverer). It was celebrated every fourth year.

el'e-vate, 1 el'ı-vēt; 2 ĕl'e-vāt, vt. [-VAT'ED⁴; -VAT'ING.] 1. To raise from a lower to a higher place, rank, or character; promote; exalt. 2. To raise the spirits of; cheer; inspire. 3. To raise the pitch or increase the loudness of. [< L. e, out, + levo, lighten.] Syn.: see HEIGHTEN; PROMOTE; RAISE.—el'e-vate, a. [Poet.] Raised or lifted up; elevated.—el'e-vat"ed. 1. pa. 1. Lofty in situation; high; as, an elevated plateau. 2. Lofty in character; sublime. II. n. [U. S.] An overhead railroad. Syn.: (adj.) see GRAND; HIGH.—el"e-va'tion, n. 1. The act of elevating; exaltation. 2. An elevated place. 3. Drawing. The front view of a building or the like. 4. Slight intoxication. 5. Eccl. (1) The raising of the eucharistic elements. elevation of the Host‡. (2) The music of voice or instrument that accompanies this ceremony. 6. Topog. Height above the sea-level. 7. Astron. The distance of a celestial body above the horizon or the arc of a vertical circle intercepted between it and the horizon. Syn.: see HEIGHT; RAMPART.—el'e-va"tor, n. 1. One who or that which elevates; a hoisting-mechanism for grain, or a warehouse where grain is elevated and distributed; also, a movable platform or cage in a building, for carrying freight or passengers up or down. 2. Aero. In flying-machines, a plane by the tilting or dipping of which the ascent or descent of a machine is regulated; also called driving rudder.

e-lev'en, 1 ı-lev'ŋ; 2 e-lĕv'n. I. a. Consisting of one more than ten. II. n. 1. The sum of ten and one. 2. A symbol representing this number. 3. A team or side of eleven players, as in cricket or football. [< AS. endleofan.]—e-lev'enth. I. a. 1. Next in order after the tenth. 2. Being one of eleven equal parts. II. n. 1. One of eleven equal parts. 2. The quotient of a unit divided by eleven; as, five is one-eleventh of fifty-five. 3. In a series, the unit or thing after the tenth.

elf, 1 elf; 2 ĕlf, n. To twist or entangle, as the hair, a supposed practise of the elves.

elf, n. [ELVES, pl.] 1. In folk-lore, a dwarfish, mischievous sprite. 2. A dwarf or diminutive person: a pet name for a lively child. [< AS. ælf.]—elf'-child", n. A child believed to have been left by elves in place of one that they have stolen; a changeling.—elf'in. I. a. Relating or belonging to elves. II. n. 1. An elf. 2. A sportive child.—elf'ish, a. Relating to elves; mischievous. -ly, adv. -ness, n.—elf'-land, n. The supposed home of the elves; fairyland.—elf'-lock, n. A lock of hair tangled as if by elves; a straggling lock.

Elfs'borg, 1 elfs'bôrg; 2 ĕlfs'bôrg, n. A province in S. W. Sweden: 4,938 sq. m.; pop. 288,000; capital, Wenersborg.

El'gin, 1 el'gın; 2 ĕl'ǧin, n. 1. Earl of (1777–1841), Thomas Bruce, a British diplomat; envoy successively to Brussels, Berlin, Constantinople; collected the "Elgin marbles," a collection of Greek sculptures, now in the British Museum, considered to be the finest in existence. 2. Earl of (1849–), Victor Alexander Bruce, a British statesman; Viceroy of India, 1894–

e-len'chus, 1 ı-leŋ'kus; 2 e-lĕŋ'cŭs, n. [-CHI, 1 -kaı; 2 -ĕ, pl.] Logic. 1. The contradictory opposite of a proposition; that which must be proved in order to refute an opponent; hence, a refuting argument; a refutation. 2. A false refutation; sophism. 3. [Rare.] An analytical table of contents; explanatory notes. [< L. elenchus, < Gr. elenchos, < elenchō, disgrace, confute.]

e-lench't.—e-len'chic, a. Having the nature or effect of an elenchus; refutatory. e-len'chi-cal‡; e-lench'tic‡; e-lench'ti-cal‡; e-lenc'tic‡; e-lenc'ti-cal‡.

1899; Secretary of State for the Colonies, 1905–1908. 3. A county in Scotland; 488 sq. m.; pop. 41,600. El'gin-shire‡. 4. Its capital; pop. 7,780; ancient city; ruins of cathedral and castle. 5. 1 el'jin; 2 él'gin. A city (pop. 27,460) in N. Illinois.

El'gon, 1 el'gən; 2 él'gŏn, n. A mountain in British East Africa, N. E. of Victoria Nyanza; 14,044 ft. high.

E'li, 1 ī'laɪ; 2 ē'lī, n. Bib. (1226–1128 B. C.) A high priest and judge. 1 Sam. iv, 13–18. [Heb., the highest.]

E'li-a, 1 ī'lɪ-ə; 2 ē'lī-a, n. Pen-name of Charles Lamb.

In the above table the Mendelejeff classification has been mainly followed. Formerly elements were grouped according to their resemblance to some member, as the Potassium group, the Calcium group, the Magnesium group, etc. Since the acceptance of the periodic law elements have been arranged in the order of their atomic weights, and each group shows indications of an arithmetical progression. See PERIODIC LAW, under LAW.

The factors in the columns of specific gravities and melting-points naturally vary with the form that the element takes (e. g., in carbon the specific gravity varies as diamond, charcoal, or lampblack is taken), but as far as possible the factor of the most typical form is given.

SYN.: engage, engross, hire, make use of, use, use up. In general terms it may be said that to employ is to devote to one's purpose, to use is to render subservient to one's purpose; what is used is viewed as more absolutely an instrument than what is employed; a merchant employs a clerk; he uses pen and paper; hence, use, as applied to persons, inclines to the derogatory sense; as, the conspirators used him as a go-between. That which is used is often consumed in the using, or in familiar phrase used up; as, we used twenty tons of coal last winter; in such cases we could not substitute employ. A person may be employed in his own work or in that of another; in the latter case the service is always understood to be for pay. In this connection employ is a word of more dignity than hire; a general is employed in his country's service; a mercenary adventurer is hired to fight a tyrant's battles; hire now implies that the one hired works directly and primarily for the pay, as expressed in the noun "hireling." See OCCUPY; RETAIN. Compare BUSINESS.—PROP.: employ in, on, upon, or about a work, business, etc.; for a purpose; at a stipulated salary.

end[d], 1 end; 2 ĕnd, v. I. t. 1. To put an end to; come to the end of; finish. 2. To form the end of. 3. To terminate the life of; kill. 4. To fit or add an end to or into. 5. To set on end. 6. [Prov. Eng.] To stack in a barn, as corn or hay. II. i. 1. To come to an end; conclude. 2. To issue or result. 3. To be laid at or by the end. [< AS. endian, < ende, end.]

Syn.: break off, cease, close, complete, conclude, desist, expire, finish, quit, terminate, top, wind up. That ends, or is ended, of which there is no more, whether or not more was intended or needed; that is closed, completed, concluded, or finished which has come to an expected or appropriate end. A tumult in the audience may cause a speech to be ended when it is neither closed, completed, nor finished, nor, in the strict sense, concluded. An argument may be closed with nothing proved; when an argument is concluded all that is deemed necessary to prove the point has been stated. To finish is to do the last thing there is to do; as, "I have finished my course," 2 Tim. iv, 7. The enumeration is completed; the poem, the picture, the statue is finished. To terminate may be either to bring to an arbitrary or to an appropriate end; as, he terminated his remarks abruptly; the spire terminates in a cross. A thing stops that comes to rest from motion; or the motion stops or ceases when the object comes to rest; stop frequently signifies to bring or come to a sudden and decided cessation of motion, progress, or action of any kind. Compare ABOLISH; CEASE; DO; EFFECT; FINISH; TRANSACT.—Ant.: commence, enter upon, found, inaugurate, initiate, institute, make a beginning, open, originate, set about, set out (upon), start, undertake. Compare INSTITUTE, v.

end, n. 1. The terminal point or part of any material object that has length. 2. The part of an object that is near either extremity. 3. The point in time at which some process ceases; hence, the conclusion of any work or operation. 4. The farthest limit of the space occupied by any extended object. 5. The purpose in view. 6. An inevitable or natural consequence. 7. The close of life. 8. A fragment; remnant. 9. A player stationed at the end of a line, as in football. [AS. ende.]

Syn.: accomplishment, achievement, bound, boundary, cessation, close, completion, conclusion, consequence, consummation, design, effect, expiration, extent, extremity, finale, finis, finish, fulfilment, goal, intent, issue, limit, outcome, period, point, purpose, result, termination, terminus, tip, utmost, uttermost. The end is the terminal part of a material object that has length; the extremity is distinctively the terminal point, and may thus be but part of the end in the general sense of that word: the extremity is viewed as that which is most remote from some center, or some mean or standard position: the southern end of South America includes all Patagonia, the southern extremity or point is Cape Horn. Tip has nearly the same meaning as extremity, but is said of small or slight and tapering objects; as, the tip of the finger; point in such connections is said of that which is drawn out to exceeding fineness or sharpness, as the point of a needle, a fork, or a sword; extremity is said of something considerable; we do not speak of the extremity of a needle. A goal is an end sought or striven for, as in a race. For the figurative senses of end and its associated words, compare the synonyms for the verb END; also for AIM; CONSEQUENCE; DESIGN; EVENT; PURPOSE; REASON; TERMINATION.—Ant.: see synonyms for BEGINNING.

—in the end, at last.—to the end that, in order that.—end'ˌall", n. That which ends all; final or complete ending.—end'er, n. One who or that which brings something to an end; as, an ender of hope.—end'less, a. 1. Enduring everlastingly; eternal. 2. Having no end in space; boundless; infinite. 3. Continually recurring; incessant. 4. Forming a closed loop or circle; continuous. Syn.: see ETERNAL; IMMORTAL; PERPETUAL.—end'less-ly, adv.—end'less-ness, n.—end'long, adv. 1. Lengthwise; at full length. 2. Continuously. 3. On end; perpendicularly. ende'longe†.—end'ˌman, n. [-MEN, pl.] In a minstrel troupe, one who sits at either of the two ends of the company as grouped upon the stage, and assists in comic dialogs.—end'ˌmost", a. Placed or being at the extreme end; most remote; farthest.—end'ˌor"gan, *n. en-deav'or, ⌊ 1 en-dev'ar; 2 ĕn-dĕv'or, vt. & vi. 1. To en-deav'our, ⌋ make an effort to do or effect; undertake. 2. To exert oneself to accomplish an object. en-dev'or‡.

Syn.: attempt, essay, strive, try, undertake. To attempt is to take action somewhat experimentally with the hope and purpose of accomplishing a certain result; to endeavor is to attempt strenuously and with firm and enduring purpose. To attempt expresses a single act; to endeavor, a continuous exertion; we say I will endeavor (not I will attempt) while I live. To attempt is with the view of accomplishing; to essay with a view of testing our own powers. To undertake is to accept or take upon oneself as an obligation, as some business, labor, or trust; the word often implies complete assurance of success: as, I will undertake to produce the witness. To strive suggests little of the result, much of toil, strain, and contest, in seeking it; I will strive to fulfil your wishes, that is, I will spare no labor and exertion to do it. Try is the most comprehensive of these words. The original idea of testing or experimenting is not thought of when a man says "I will try." To attempt suggests giving up, if the thing is not accomplished at a stroke; to try implies using other means and studying out other ways if not at first successful. Try is more earnest; endeavor is more mild and formal.—Ant.: abandon, dismiss, drop, give up, let go, neglect, omit, overlook, pass by, throw away, throw over, throw up.

—en-deav'or-er, n. One who endeavors; specifically, a member of a Society of Christian Endeavor. en-deav'our-er‡. —en-deav'or-ment†, en-deav'our-ment†, n.

en-deav'or, ⌊ n. An attempt or effort to do or attain some-en-deav'our, ⌋ thing; earnest exertion for an end. [< EN-[1] + F. devoir, duty.] en-dev'or‡.

Syn.: attempt, effort, essay, exertion, struggle, trial. Effort denotes the voluntary putting forth of power to attain or accomplish some specific thing; it reaches toward a definite end; exertion is a putting forth of power without special reference to an object. Every effort is an exertion, but not every exertion is an effort. Attempt is more experimental than effort, endeavor less strenuous but more continuous. An effort is a single act, an endeavor a continued series of acts; an endeavor is sustained and enduring, and may be lifelong; we do not have a society of Christian Attempt, or of Christian Effort, but of Christian Endeavor. A struggle is a violent effort or strenuous exertion. An essay is an attempt, effort, or endeavor made as a test of the powers of the one who makes it. See AIM; ATTEMPT. Compare ENDEAVOR, v.

Syn.: abide, afford, allow, bear, bear up under, bear with, brook, permit, put up with, submit to, suffer, support, sustain, tolerate, undergo. Bear is the most general of these words; it is metaphorically to hold up or keep up a burden of care, pain, grief, annoyance, or the like, without sinking, lamenting, or repining. Allow and permit involve large concession of the will; put up with and tolerate imply decided aversion and reluctant withholding of opposition or interference; whispering is allowed by the school-teacher who does not forbid nor censure it; one puts up with the presence of a disagreeable visitor; a state tolerates a religion which it would be glad to suppress. To endure is to bear with strain and resistance, but with conscious power; endure conveys a fuller suggestion of contest and conquest than bear. One may choose to endure the pain of a surgical operation rather than take anesthetics; he permits the thing to come which he must brace himself to endure when it comes. To afford is to be equal to a pecuniary demand, that is, to be able to bear it. To brook is quietly to put up with provocation or insult. Abide combines the senses of await and endure; as, I will abide the result. Compare ABIDE; LIVE; PERSEVERE; PERSIST; STAND; SUPPORT.—Ant.: break, break down, despair, droop, fall, faint, fall, falter, give out, give up, sink, succumb, surrender, yield.

Syn.: adversary, antagonist, competitor, foe, opponent, rival. An enemy in private life is one who is moved by hostile feeling with active disposition to injure; but in military language all who fight on the opposite side are called enemies or collectively "the enemy," where no personal animosity may be implied; foe, which is rather a poetical and literary word, implies intensely hostile spirit and purpose. An antagonist is one who opposes and is opposed actively and with intensity of effort; an opponent, one in whom the attitude of resistance is the more prominent; a competitor, one who seeks the same object for which another is striving; antagonists in wrestling, competitors in business, opponents in debate may contend with no personal ill will; rivals in love, ambition, etc., rarely avoid inimical feeling. Adversary now commonly denotes one who not only opposes another in fact, but does so with hostile spirit, or perhaps out of pure malignity. Compare synonyms for AMBITION.—Ant.: abettor, accessory, accomplice, ally, friend, helper, supporter.

Syn.: amuse, beguile, cheer, delight, disport, divert, enliven, gratify, interest, occupy, please, recreate. To entertain, in the sense here considered, is to engage and pleasantly occupy the attention; to occupy the attention in an especially bright and cheerful way, often with that which excites merriment or laughter; as, he entertained us with an amusing story. To divert is to turn from serious thoughts or laborious pursuits to something that lightly and agreeably occupies the mind; one may be entertained or amused who has nothing serious or laborious from which to be diverted. To recreate, literally to re-create, is to engage mind or body in some pleasing activity that restores strength and energy for serious work. To beguile is, as it were, to cheat into cheer and comfort by something that insensibly draws thought or feeling away from pain or disquiet. We beguile a weary hour, cheer the despondent, divert the preoccupied, enliven a dull evening or company, gratify our friends' wishes, entertain, interest, please a listening audience, occupy idle time, disport ourselves when merry, recreate when worn with toil; we amuse ourselves or others with whatever pleasantly passes the time without special exertion, each according to his taste. See ACCOMMODATE; AMUSE; CHERISH; INTEREST.—Ant.: annoy, bore, busy, disquiet, distract, disturb, tire, weary.

Syn.: amusement, cheer, delight, diversion, enjoyment, frolic, fun, merriment, pastime, pleasure, recreation, sport. Entertain- ment and recreation imply thought and mental occupation, but in an agreeable, refreshing way; they are therefore words of a high order. Entertainment is used of somewhat mirthful mental delight; recreation may, and usually does, combine the mental with the physical. Amusement and pastime are nearly equivalent, the latter probably the lighter word; many slight things may be pastimes which we should hardly dignify by the name of amusements. Sports are almost wholly on the physical plane, while involving a certain grade of mental action, fox-hunting, horse-racing, baseball, etc. Cheer may be very quiet, as the cheer of a bright fire to an aged traveler; merriment is with liveliness and laughter; fun and frolic are apt to be boisterous. Compare ENTERTAIN; FROLIC; SPORT.—Ant.: ennui, fatigue, labor, lassitude, toil, weariness, work.

en"thel-min'tha, 1 en"thel-min'thə; 2 ĕn"thĕl-mĭn'thə, n. pl. Worm-like entozoans. [< ENT- (see ENTO-) + Gr. helmin(ith-)s, worm.] en"thel-min'thes‡.—en"thel-min'thic, a.

en-thu'si-asm, 1 en-thū'zi-azm; 2 ĕn-thū'zi-ăzm, n. 1. Earnest and fervent feeling; ardent zeal for a person or cause. 2‖. Exalted or ecstatic feeling; also, irrational religious ecstasy; divine fury or frenzy; possession. [< Gr. enthousiasmos, < en, in, + theos, god.]

Syn.: ardor, devotion, eagerness, earnestness, ecstasy, excitement, extravagance, fanaticism, fervency, fervor, frenzy, inspiration, intensity, passion, rapture, transport, vehemence, warmth, zeal. The old meaning of enthusiasm implies a pseudo-inspiration, an almost frantic extravagance in behalf of something supposed to be an expression of the divine will. This sense remains as the controlling one in the kindred noun enthusiast. Enthusiasm has now chiefly the meaning of an earnest and commendable devotion, an intense and eager interest. Against the hindrances of the world, nothing great and good can be carried without a certain fervor, intensity, and vehemence; these joined with faith, courage, and hopefulness make enthusiasm. Zeal is burning earnestness, always tending to vigorous action with all the devotion of enthusiasm, but often without its hopefulness. Compare EAGER; WARMTH.—Ant.: calculation, calmness, caution, coldness, deadness, dulness, indifference, lukewarmness, policy, prudence, timidity, wariness.

—en-thu'si-ast, n. One prone to or moved by enthusiasm: an ardent adherent; zealot.—en-thu"si-as'tic, a. Given to enthusiasm; ardent; zealous. en-thu"si-as'ti-cal‡. Syn.: see EAGER; SANGUINE.—en-thu"si-as'ti-cal-ly, adv.

SYN.: ambiguous, doubtful, dubious, enigmatic, enigmatical, indefinite, indeterminate, indistinct, obscure, perplexing, questionable, suspicious, uncertain. Ambiguous is applied only to spoken or written statements; equivocal has other applications. A statement is ambiguous when it leaves the mind of the reader or hearer to fluctuate between two meanings, which would fit the language equally well; it is equivocal when it would naturally be understood in one way, but is capable of a different interpretation; an equivocal expression is, as a rule, intentionally deceptive, while an ambiguous utterance may be simply the result of a want either of clear thought or of adequate expression. That which is enigmatical must be guessed like a riddle. That is doubtful which is fairly open to doubt; that is dubious which has become the subject of doubts so grave as scarcely to fall short of condemnation; as, a dubious reputation. Questionable may be used nearly in the sense either of dubious or of doubtful; a questionable statement is one that must be proved before it can be accepted. A suspicious character gives reason to be suspected; a suspicious temper is inclined to suspect the others, with or without reason. Compare CLEAR; PRECARIOUS.—Ant.: certain, clear, distinct, evident, indisputable, indubitable, lucid, manifest, obvious, perspicuous, plain, unambiguous, unequivocal, unquestionable, unquestioned.

es-teem′, 1 es-tīm′; 2 ĕs-tēm′, v. I. t. 1. To regard as having worth or excellence; prize. 2. To hold in estimation (favorable or unfavorable); value; estimate; also, to deem; estimate generally. II‖. i. To make an estimate; consider.

Syn.: appreciate, calculate, consider, deem, estimate, hold, prize, regard, think, value. Esteem and estimate alike imply to set a certain mental value upon, but esteem is less precise and mercantile than calculate or estimate. We esteem a jewel precious; we estimate it to be worth so much money. In popular usage esteem, as said of persons, denotes a union of respect and kindly feeling and, in the highest sense, of moral approbation; as, one whom I highly esteem. To appreciate anything is to be deeply or keenly sensible of or sensitive to its qualities or influence; as, to appreciate beauty or harmony; to appreciate one's services. To prize is to set a high value on for something more than merely commercial reasons. To regard (F. regarder, look at, observe) is to have a certain mental view favorable or unfavorable; as, I regard him as a friend; or, I regard him as a villain; regard has a distinctively favorable sense as applied to institutions, properties, duties, etc., but does not share the use of the noun regard as applied to persons; we regard the Sabbath; we regard a person's feelings; we have a regard for the person. See ADMIRE; APPRECIATE; LIKE. Compare ESTEEM, n.—Syn.: see synonyms for ABHOR.

es-teem′, n. 1. Favorable opinion or estimation on the basis of worth, especially that based on moral characteristics; respect; regard. 2. Character that commands respect or consideration; estimableness; as, a person of esteem. 3‖. Estimation or judgment of merit or demerit; opinion; estimation. 4†. Estimated value or gain; valuation. [< L.F æstimo, value.]

Syn.: estimate, estimation, favor, regard, respect. Esteem for a person is a favorable opinion on the basis of worth, especially of moral worth, joined with a feeling of interest in and attraction toward the person. Regard for a person is the mental view or feeling that springs from a sense of his excellence, with a cordial and hearty friendliness. Regard is more personal and less distant than esteem, and adds a special kindliness; respect is a more distant word than esteem. Respect may be wholly on one side, while regard is commonly mutual; respect in the fullest sense is given to what is lofty, worthy, and honorable, or to a person of such qualities; but we may pay respect to station or office, regardless of the person holding it. Estimate has more of calculation; as, my estimate of the man, or of his abilities, is very high. Estimation involves the idea of calculation or appraisal with that of esteem or regard, and is especially used of the feeling entertained by numbers of people; as, he stood high in public estimation. Compare ESTEEM, v.; ATTACHMENT; FRIENDSHIP; LOVE; REGARD.—Ant.: abhorrence, antipathy, aversion, contempt, dislike, hatred, loathing, repugnance.

Syn.: case, chance, circumstance, consequence, contingency, end, episode, fact, fortune, incident, issue, occurrence, outcome, possibility, result, sequel. Etymologically, the incident is that which falls in, the event that which comes out; event is thus greater and more signal than incident; we speak of trifling incidents, great events; incidents of daily life, events of history. Circumstance agrees with incident in denoting a matter of relatively slight importance, but implies a more direct connection w th the principal matter as indicated in the phrase "circumstantial evidence." An occurrence is, etymologically, that which we run against, without thought of its origin, connection, or tendency. An episode is connected with the main course of events, like an incident or circumstance, but is of more independent interest and importance. Outcome is the Saxon, and event the Latin for expressing the same original idea. Consequence and result express more of logical connection, and are more comprehensive. The end may be simple cessation; the event is what has been accomplished; the event of a war is victory or defeat; the end of the war is reached when a treaty of peace is signed. Since the future is contingent, event comes to have the meaning of a contingency; as, in the event of his death, the policy will at once fall due. Compare CIRCUMSTANCE; CONSEQUENCE; END.—e-vent'ful, a. Attended or characterized by important or noteworthy events; also, momentous. -ly, adv. -ness, n. e-vent'less, a.

e-ven'tu-al, 1 ı-ven'chu-[or -tiu-]al; 2 ē-vĕn'chu-[or -tū-]al, a. 1. Pertaining to or being a result; consequential; ultimate. 2. Dependent upon a final contingency.—e-ven"tu-al'i-ty, n. [-TIES², pl.] The character of happening contingently or as a result; also, a consequential event or issue.—e-ven'tu-al-ly, adv. Ultimately; finally.—e-ven'tu-ate, vt. [-AT"ED¢; -AT"ING.] 1. To have a particular event or issue; result. 2. To be the event or issue; happen.—e-ven"tu-a'tion, n.

ev'er, 1 ev'er; 2 ĕv'er, adv. 1. At any time; in any case. 2. In any degree; at all. 3. Under all circumstances; always; perpetually. This word is misused for never; as, "We seldom or ever see those forsaken who trust in God," which should be "seldom or never." But "seldom if ever" would be correct; that is, "in few or no instances" or "in few if any." [AS. æfre.]—ever and anon, now and then; at one time and at another; repeatedly.—e. so, in or to whatever conceivable degree or extent; very; as, he is ever so strong; the patient is ever so much better.—for e. and a day, for e. and e., see under FOREVER.—ev'er-green", a. Retaining verdure throughout the year; always fresh. II. n. 1. A tree or other plant which retains its verdure or foliage throughout the year, as the pine, fir, hemlock, laurel, etc. 2. A branch or twig of an evergreen plant or tree, or the plant itself, used for decoration; as, Christmas evergreens.—ev"er-last'ing, a. 1. Lasting forever; eternal. 2. Interminable; incessant; also, exceedingly durable. II. n. 1. Past or future endless duration; eternity. 2. [E-] The one who is eternal; God; preceded by the definite article. 3. A plant whose flowers retain their form and colors when dried. 4. Prunella; lasting. 5. A game of cards. Syn.: see ETERNAL; IMMORTAL.—ev"er-last'ing-ly, adv.—ev"er-liv'ing, a. 1. Immortal. 2. Permanent; unfailing. eve'ry, 1 ev'ri; 2 ĕv'ry. I. a. 1. Each, as of an aggregate of individuals; all taken one by one. 2. All possible. II. pron. Law. Every one; each. [< AS. æfre (see EVER + ælc; see EACH.] Syn.: all, any, both, each, either. All and both are collective; any, each, and every are distributive. Any makes no selection and may not reach to the full limits of all; each and every make no exception or omission, and must extend to all; all sweeps in the units as part of a total, each and every proceed through the units to the total. A promise made to all omits none; a promise made to any may not reach all; a promise made to every one is so made that no individual shall fa'l to be aware of it; a promise made to each is made to the individuals personally, one by one. Each is thus more individual and specific than every; every classifies, each individualizes. Each divides, both unites; if a certain sum is given to each of two persons, both (together) must receive twice the amount; both must be aware of what has been separately communicated to each; a man may fire both barrels of a gun by a single movement; if he fires each barrel, he discharges them separately. Either commonly denotes one of two, indefinitely to the exclusion of the other; either is also in good, but somewhat archaic, use, in the sense of each or both of two, taken separately and indifferently; as, on either side of the river. "There was a huge fireplace at either end of the hall." SCOTT Ivanhoe iii.—eve'ry-bod"y, n. Every person; people in general.—eve'ry-day", a. Suitable for every day; ordinary; usual. Syn.: see COMMON; GENERAL; USUAL.—e. one, each individual out of the whole number; all persons distributively; also, everybody.—eve'ry-thing, n. 1. Each one in a collection or number of things; whatever exists. 2. Something supremely important or including all things.—eve'ry-where", adv. 1. At or in every place. 2. [Colloq.] Wherever.

ev'i-dence, 1 ev'i-dens; 2 ĕv'i-dĕnc. I. vt. [-DENCED†; -DENC-ING.] To make evident; show clearly; prove. II. n. 1. That which makes evident, whether taken singly or collectively; any ground or reason for knowledge or certitude in knowledge; proof, whether immediate or derived by inference; a fact or body of facts on which a proof, belief, or judgment is based. 2. Law. That by means of which a fact is established; testimony. 3§. A person or thing that bears testimony. 4§. Evidentness; clearness. [< L. evidentia, clearness.] Syn.: see CERTAINTY; DEMONSTRATION; PROOF; TESTIMONY.—in evidence, perfectly plain; apparent.—King's e., Queen's e., same as STATE'S EVIDENCE.—state's e. 1. One who confesses himself guilty of a crime and proffers himself as a witness to testify against his accomplices. 2. The evidence produced by the state in criminal prosecutions.

ev'i-dent, 1 ev'i-dent; 2 ĕv'i-dĕnt, a. Plain or manifest, as to the mind or the senses; obvious. -ly, adv.

Syn.: apparent, clear, conspicuous, discernible, distinct, glaring, indubitable, manifest, obvious, open, overt, palpable, patent, perceptible, plain, tangible, transparent, unmistakable, visible. That is apparent which clearly appears to the senses or to the mind as soon as the attention is directed toward it; that is evident of which the mind is made sure by some inference that supplements the facts of perception; the marks of a struggle were apparent in broken shrubbery and trampled ground, and the finding of a mutilated body and a rifled purse made it evident that robbery and murder had been committed. That is manifest which we can lay the hand upon; manifest is thus stronger than evident, as touch is more absolute than sight. That is obvious which is directly in the way so that it can not be missed; as, the application of the remark was obvious. Visible applies to all that can be perceived by the sense of sight, whether the noonday sun, a ship on the horizon, or a microscopic object. Discernible applies to that which is dimly or faintly visible, requiring strain and effort in order to be seen; as, the ship was discernible through the mist. That is conspicuous which stands out so as necessarily or strikingly to attract the attention. Palpable and tangible express more emphatically the thought of manifest. See APPARENT; CLEAR; MANIFEST; NOTORIOUS.—Ant.: concealed, covert, dark, hidden, impalpable, impenetrable, imperceptible, invisible, latent, obscure, occult, secret, undiscovered, unimagined, unknown, unseen, unthought of.

ex-am′pl(e²), n. 1. A thing or person suitable to be used as a copy. 2. An instance of something to be avoided. 3. A sample; specimen. 4. An instance serving to illustrate a rule. 5. A problem to be solved. 6. That with which something may be compared; precedent; parallel. [< L.[OF] exemplum, < ex, out, + emptus, pp. of emo, buy.] Syn.: archetype, ensample, exemplar, exemplification, ideal, model, pattern, precedent, prototype, sample, specimen, standard, type, warning. From its original sense of sample or speci- men (L. exemplum) example derives the seemingly contradictory meanings, on the one hand of a pattern or model, and on the other hand of a warning—a sample or specimen of what is to be followed, or of what is to be shunned. An example, however, may be more than a sample or specimen of any class; it may be the very archetype or prototype to which the whole class must conform, as when Christ is spoken of as being an example or leaving an example for his disciples. Example comes nearer to the possible freedom of the model than to the necessary exactness of the pattern; often we can not, in a given case, exactly imitate the best example, but only adapt its teachings to altered circumstances. In its application to a person or thing, exemplar can scarcely be distinguished from example; but example is most frequently used for an act, or course of action, for which exemplar is not used; as, one sets a good (or a bad) example. An exemplification is an illustrative working out in action of a principle or law, without any reference to its being copied or repeated; an example guides, an exemplification illustrates or explains. Ensample is the same as example, but is practically obsolete outside of Scriptural or theological language. Compare ARCHETYPE; MODEL; PRECEDENT; SAMPLE.

ex-an'i-mate, 1 egz-an'ı-mit; 2 ĕgz-ăn'ı-mat, a. 1. Deprived of life; inanimate. 2. Having no animation. [< L. exanimatus, pp. of exanimo, kill.]—ex-an"i-ma'tion, n. Med. Real or apparent death; swooning.

Syn.: dissipation, exorbitance, extravagance, intemperance, lavishness, overplus, prodigality, profusion, redundance, redundancy, superabundance, superfluity, surplus, waste, wastefulness. Excess is more than enough of anything, and, since this in very many cases indicates a lack either of judgment or of self-control, the word is used frequently, but not necessarily, in an unfavorable sense. Careless expenditure in excess of income is extravagance; we may have also extravagance of language, professions, etc. As extravagance is excess in outlay, exorbitance is excess in demands, and especially in pecuniary demands upon others. Overplus and superabundance denote in the main a satisfactory and superfluity an undesirable excess; lavishness and profusion, a generous, bountiful, or amiable excess; as, a profusion of fair hair; lavishness of hospitality. Surplus is neutral, having none of the unfavorable meaning that often attaches to excess; a surplus is that which remains over after all demands are met. Redundance or redundancy refers chiefly to literary style, denoting an excess of words or matter. Excess in the moral sense is expressed by dissipation, prodigality, intemperance, etc.—Ant.: dearth, defect, deficiency, destitution, economy, failure, frugality, inadequacy, insufficiency, lack, need, poverty, scantiness, shortcoming, want.

—ex-cess', a. Being above a stipulated amount; extra.—ex-ces'siv(e[s], a. Being, in, tending to, marked by excess; immoderate; extreme. Syn.: see IMMODERATE; REDUNDANT.—ex-ces'siv(e-ly[s]†, adv.—ex-ces'siv(e-ness[s], n.

ex-claim', 1 eks-klēm'; 2 ĕks-clām', vt. & vi. To cry out abruptly or with passion. [< L. ex, out, + clamo, cry.]

Syn.: call, cry out, ejaculate. In exclaiming, the utterance may not be strikingly, even if somewhat, above the ordinary tone and pitch; we may exclaim by mere interjections, or by connected words. To ejaculate is to throw out brief, disconnected, but coherent utterances of joy, regret, and especially of appeal, petition, prayer; the use of such devotional utterances has received the special name of "ejaculatory prayer." To cry out is to give forth a louder and more excited utterance than in exclaiming; one often exclaims with sudden joy as well as sorrow; if he cries out, it is oftener in grief or agony. See CALL.

faith†, vt. To believe; give credence to; credit.

faith, 1 fēth; 2 fāth, n. 1. A firm belief in what another states, affirms, or testifies, simply on the ground of his truth or veracity; especially (as distinguished from mere belief), practical dependence on a person, statement, or thing as trustworthy; trust; as, faith in a friend (as sincere and true); faith in his advice (as wise and good); faith in his efforts (as likely to be efficacious). 2. Theol. Specif., (1) The assent of the mind or understanding to the truth of what God has revealed; belief in the testimony of God as contained in the Scriptures. (2) A divinely wrought, loving, and hearty reliance upon God and his promise of salvation through Christ: sometimes called justifying or saving faith; as, we are saved through faith. (3) More widely, operative belief in the truths of religion; as, a serene and blessed faith. 3. Intellectual conviction in general, on whatever based, including even an approach to absolute knowledge; as, faith in Herodotus; faith in a mathematical demonstration or axiom. 4. A doctrine or system of doctrines, or a proposition or set of propositions, that one holds to be true; specif.: a religious creed or article of belief; as, the Lutheran faith; a man's political faith. 5. An obligation to fidelity, whether expressed or implied; also, the observance of this obligation; unwavering adherence to principle, especially as affecting one's relations to others; fidelity; loyalty; as, to keep (or break) faith with an ally. [< L.^{ob} fides, faith.]

Syn.: assent, assurance, belief, confidence, conviction, credence, credit, creed, doctrine, opinion, reliance, trust. Belief, as an intellectual process, is the acceptance of something as true on other grounds than personal observation and experience. We give credence to a report, assent to a proposition or to a proposal. Belief is stronger than credence; credence might be described as a prima facie belief; credence is a more formal word than belief, and seems to imply somewhat more of volition; we speak of giving credence to a report, but not of giving belief. Goods are sold on credit; we give one credit for good intentions. Conviction is a belief established by argument or evidence; assurance is belief beyond the reach of argument; as, the Christian's assurance of salvation. Faith is a union of belief and trust. Faith is chiefly personal; belief may be quite impersonal: we speak of belief of a proposition, faith in a promise, because the promise emanates from a person. But belief in a person is often used with no appreciable difference from faith. In religion it is common to distinguish between intellectual belief of religious truth, as any other truth might be believed, and belief of the heart, or saving faith. Compare FIDELITY; OPINION; RELIGION; TRUST.—Ant.: denial, disbelief, dissent, distrust, doubt, incredulity, infidelity, misgiving, rejection, skepticism, suspicion, unbelief.—Prep.: commonly in.

—faith'-cure", n. The real or imaginary cure of disease by virtue of prayer, with faith in its efficacy. [FAITH.]

fa(i)'ther, 1 fā'ther; 2 fä'ther, n. [Scot.] Father.

faith'ful, 1 fēth'ful; 2 fāth'fụl, a. 1. True or trustworthy in the performance of duty, especially in the fulfilment of promises, obligations, vows, and the like; as, a faithful servant; faithful to one's agreement. 2. True in detail; accurate in correspondence, or exact in description; as, a faithful copy. 3. Truthful; worthy of belief or confidence; as, a faithful witness; a faithful saying. 4. Full of faith; strong or firm in faith; as, faithful convictions.

Syn.: devoted, firm, incorruptible, loyal, stanch, sure, true, trustworthy, trusty, unwavering. A person is faithful who will keep faith, whether with or without power to aid or serve; a person or thing is trusty that possesses such qualities as to justify the fullest confidence and dependence. We may speak of a faithful but feeble friend; we say a trusty agent, a trusty steed, a trusty sword. See HONEST; MORAL.—Ant.: capricious, faithless, false, fickle, unfaithful, untrue, untrustworthy, wavering.—the faithful. 1. In the early church, saints or believers; Christians. 2. In the Roman and Anglican churches, such as are in full communion. 3. In Mohammedan usage, believers in Mohammed.—faith'ful-ly, adv.—faith'ful-ness, n.—faith'less, a. 1. Untrue to promise or obligation; unfaithful; disloyal. 2. Tending or calculated to delude; deceptive and unreliable. 3. Lacking in or devoid of faith, especially in Christ or the Christian religion. fame, 1 fēm; 2 fām. I. vt. [FAMED; FAM'ING.] 1. To give a particular reputation to; speak of widely; celebrate. 2. To make famous; celebrate; as, famed for wit. II. n. 1. Public or general reputation; also, renown. 2‖. Report; rumor. [F., < L. fama, < for, speak.]

Syn.: celebrity, credit, distinction, eminence, glory, honor, laurels, notoriety, renown, reputation, repute. Fame is the widely disseminated report of a person's character, deeds, or ability, and is oftenest used in the favorable sense. Reputation and repute are more limited than fame, and may be either good or bad. Notoriety is evil repute or a dishonorable counterfeit of fame. Eminence and distinction may result from rank, station, or character. Celebrity is limited in range; we speak of local celebrity, or world-wide fame. Fame in its best sense may be defined as the applause of numbers: renown, as such applause worthily won; we speak of the conqueror's fame, the patriot's renown. Glory and honor are of good import; honor may be given for qualities or acts that should not win it, but it is always given as for something good and worthy; we speak of an evil fame, but not of evil honor; glory has a more exalted and often a sacred sense.—Ant.: contempt, contumely, discredit, disgrace, dishonor, disrepute, humiliation, ignominy, infamy, oblivion, obscurity, shame.

Syn.: chimerical, fantastic, grotesque, imaginative, visionary. That is fanciful which is dictated or suggested by fancy independently of more serious considerations; the fantastic is the fanciful with the added elements of whimsicalness and extravagance. The fanciful swings away from the real or the ordinary lightly and pleasantly, the fantastic extravagantly, the grotesque ridiculously. A fanciful arrangement of objects is commonly pleasing, a fantastic arrangement is striking, a grotesque arrangement is laughable. A fanciful theory or suggestion may be clearly recognized as such; a visionary scheme is erroneously supposed to have a basis in fact. Compare synonyms for DREAM; IDEA; IDEAL; IMAGINARY; IMAGINATION; ROMANTIC.—Ant.: accurate, calculable, calculated, commonplace, literal, ordinary, prosaic, real, reasonable, regular, sensible, solid, sound, sure, true.

[FAN'CIES[2], pl.] 1. The power or act of forming pleasing, graceful, whimsical, or odd mental images, or of combining them with little regard to rational processes of construction; imagination in its lower form; hence, in former usage, the reimaging faculty of the mind; fantasy. 2. Any product of the exercise of this faculty; an imaginary notion, representation, or image; whimsical notion; vagary. 3. A baseless or visionary idea; notion; impression. 4. A liking or fondness, as if resulting from caprice; preference, or the object toward which it is directed; as, the suggestion takes my fancy. 5. A pet pursuit; an object sought after to gratify the taste or a whim without regard to utility; a hobby; fad. 6‖. Taste exhibited in production; artistic invention; design; as, the edifice showed a cultivated fancy. 7†. Love. See THE FANCY in phrases below. [< Gr.[2] phantasia, < phainō, show.]

Syn.: belief, caprice, conceit, conception, desire, humor, idea, image, imagination, inclination, liking, mood, predilection, supposition, vagary, whim. An intellectual fancy is a mental image or picture founded upon slight or whimsical association or resemblance; a conceit has less of the picturesque and more of the theoretic than a fancy; a conceit is somewhat aside from the common laws of reasoning, as a fancy is lighter and more airy than the common mode of thought. A conceit or fancy may be wholly unfounded, while a conception always has, or is believed to have, some answering reality. (Compare REASON.) An intellectual fancy or conceit may be pleasing or amusing, but is never worth serious discussion; we speak of a mere fancy, a droll or odd conceit. An emotional or personal fancy is a capricious liking formed with slight reason and no exercise of judgment, and liable to fade as lightly as it was formed. In a broader sense, the fancy signifies the faculty by which fancies or mental images are formed, associated, or combined. Compare synonyms for DREAM; IDEA; IMAGINATION; INCLINATION; THOUGHT; WHIM.—Ant.: actuality, certainty, fact, reality, truth, verity.—Prep.: to have a fancy for or take a fancy to a person or thing.—fancy ball, a ball at which fancy dress is worn. fancy-dress ball‡.—f. dress, masquerade costume.—fan'cy-free", a. Untouched by the tender passion.—f. goods, small wares and ornamental fabrics or choice articles in general, as ribbons, silks, laces, etc., toilet articles, ornamental leather goods, etc., or Italian wares, fine liquors, selected fruits, etc.—f.-work, n. Light, ornamental employment (for ladies); specif., embroidery.—the f., the votaries collectively of any special art, sport, or amusement. fem., abbr. Feminine.

fe'male, 1 fī'mēl; 2 fē'māl. I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the sex that brings forth young or produces ova. 2. Characteristic of a woman; feminine. 3. Bot. Having a pistil, but no stamen; pistillate; capable of being fertilized and producing fruit. 4. Noting some object having a correlative known as the male; specif., in mechanics, having a hollow or bore into which the correlative may enter. 5†. Effeminate; womanly.

II. n. 1. A person or animal of the female sex.

The use of the word to mean a woman is a survival of an old English usage now regarded with disfavor by good speakers and writers. In the following sentence female is appropriately used as an expression of contempt: "He did not bid him go and sell himself to the first female he could find possessor of wealth." But female is correctly used also as the correlative of male, whether the latter be expressed or not; as, "Statistics of population show that there is an excess of females in many of our cities."

2. Bot. A pistillate plant. [< L.[F] femella, young woman.] Syn.: see FEMININE.—female rime, a feminine rime.

Syn.: effeminate, female, womanish, womanly. We apply female to the sex, feminine to the qualities, especially the finer physical or mental qualities that distinguish the female sex in the human family, or to the objects appropriate for or especially employed by them. A female voice is the voice of a woman; a feminine voice may belong to a man. Womanish denotes the undesirable, womanly the admirable or lovely qualities of woman. Womanly tears would suggest respect and sympathy, womanish tears a touch of contempt. The word effeminate is always used reproachfully, and only of men as possessing womanish traits such as are inconsistent with true manliness.—Ant.: See synonyms for MASCULINE.—feminine rime or feminine ending (Pros.), a double rime in which accent and rime fall on the penult, as in the quotation: "In this fight was Death the gainer, Spite of vassal and retainer." fer'ri-age, 1 fer'ı-ıj; 2 fêr'ı-aġ, n. 1. The act of ferrying; conveyance by ferry. 2. The toll charged for ferrying.

fer'ric, 1 fer'ık; 2 fêr'ĭc, a. 1. Pertaining to iron. 2. Chem. Pertaining to iron in its higher valence. Iron in the ferric state enters into combinations as a triad radical.—ferric acid, an unisolated acid (H_2FeO_4) known to exist by its salts, the ferrates. —f. oxid, iron sesquioxid (Fe_2O_3); hematite; one of the most important ores of iron.—f. sulfate (Chem.), a compound of iron ($Fe_2(SO_4)_3$) uniting with nine molecules of water in the form of colorless crystals: used alone or as iron alum in tanning and dyeing. [< L. ferrum, iron.]

fer'ri-cy-an'ic, 1 fer'ı-sai-an'ık; 2 fêr'ı-çỹ-ăn'ĭc, a. Chem. Of or pertaining to a compound of iron in its higher valence and cyanogen. [< ferrum, iron, + CYANIC.]

fer"ri-cy'a-nid, 1 fer'ı-sai'ə-nid, -nid or -nəid; 2 fêr"ı-çỹ'a-nid, fer"ri-cy'a-nide, } -nid or -nid, n. Chem. A salt of ferricyanic acid. [rocks.

fer-rif'er-ous, 1 fe-rif'er-us; 2 fê-rĭf'er-ŭs, a. Yielding iron, as Fer'ris wheel, 1 fer'ıs; 2 fêr'ĭs. A power-driven giant vertical wheel built on the water-wheel principle but of two sections that revolve on a stationary axle, and bear swinging observation-cars for passengers: so called for the inventor G. W. G. Ferris.

fer'rite, 1 fer'ait; 2 fêr'ĭt n. 1. Petrol. Indeterminable reddish decomposition products, in altered igneous rocks, usually consisting of hydrous iron oxid. 2. Chem. Any compound, such as franklinite (zinc ferrite), considered as a derivative of the ferric hydroxid $Fe_2O_2(OH)_2$. 3. Metal. The pure metallic form constituent in iron and steel. [< L. ferrum, iron.]

fer'ro-, 1 fer'o-; 2 fĕr'o-. From Latin ferrum, iron: a combining form, denoting (1) derivation from or composition with iron; (2) specif., the presence of iron in the ferrous condition.—fer"ro-cal'cite, n. Mineral. A variety of calcite containing ferrous carbonate.—fer'ro-chrome, n. An alloy of iron and chromium: used in the production of especially hard steel. fer"ro-chro'mi-um‡.—fer"ro-con'crete, n. Any form of concrete which is reinforced by iron or steel bars.

Fer-rol', 1 fe-rōl'; 2 fĕ-rōl', n. A fortified seaport town in N. W. Spain, with naval arsenal and dockyard; pop. 25,000.

fer"ro-mag-ne'sian, 1 fer'o-mag-nē'şən; 2 fĕr"o-măg-nē'zhan, a. Mineral. Relating to rocks rich in iron and magnesium.

fer"ro-mag-net'ic, a. 1. Acting in a magnetic field as or like iron; also, extremely magnetic. 2. Formerly, paramagnetic: opposed to diamagnetic.—fer"ro-mag'ne-tism, n.

fer"ro-man'ga-nese, 1 fer"o-man'gə-nīz; 2 fĕr"o-măn'gą-nēs, n. An alloy of iron and manganese, containing over 25 per cent. of manganese and being rich in carbon. It is used in making Bessemer steel.—fer"ro-mo-lyb'de-num, n. An alloy of iron and molybdenum: used in the manufacture of a special steel.—fer"ro-nick'el, n. An alloy of iron and nickel containing over 25 per cent. of nickel and practically free from carbon.—fer"ro-sil'i-con, n. Chem. A compound of silicon and iron added to iron when molten, to increase the proportion of silicon. [W.]—fer"ro-tung'sten' n. An alloy of iron and tungsten: used in the manufacture of tool-steel for rapid working (high-speed tool-steel). [iron, + -TYPE.]

fer'ro-type, 1 fer'o-tīp; 2 fĕr'o-tȳp, n. A tintype. [< L. ferrum, iron.]

fer'rous, 1 fer'us; 2 fĕr'ŭs, a. In chemistry, of or pertaining to iron combined in its lower valence, where its combining value is lowest; as, ferrous chlorid ($FeCl_2$).—ferrous carbonate (Chem.), a compound ($FeCO_3$) precipitated as a white solid, uniting readily with the free oxygen of the air; also found as a mineral, which is an important iron ore.—f. sulfate (Chem.), a compound ($FeSO_4$) or, in its crystallized form ($FeSO_4.7H_2O$), which unites with free oxygen to form ferric sulfate. See COPPERAS.—f. sulfid (Chem.), a compound (FeS) formed either as a black solid precipitated by the action of an iron salt solution with an alkaline sulfid, or as a brittle solid from the union of sulfur and iron under heat; a source of hydrogen sulfid. [< L. ferrum, iron.]

fer"ro-va-na'di-um, 1 fer"o-və-nē'dı-um; 2 fĕr"o-va-nā'dı-ŭm, n. An alloy of iron and vanadium: used in the manufacture of a special steel.

fer-ru'gi-nous, 1 fe-rū'jı-nus; 2 fĕ-rų'gi-nŭs, a. 1. Of or like iron. 2. Rust-colored. [< L. ferruginus, < ferrum, iron.]

fer'rule, 1 fer'ul or -ul; 2 fĕr'ŭl or -ųl, vt. To furnish with a ferrule.

fer'rule, n. 1. A metal ring or cap, as on the end of a cane. 2. A bushing or thimble. 3. The frame of a slate. [< L.LAT virola, ring.] fer'rel‡; fer'rĭl‡; fer'ule‡.

fer'rum, 1 fer'um; 2 fĕr'ŭm, n. [L.] Chem. Iron.

fer'ry, 1 fer'ı; 2 fĕr'y, v. [FER'RIED; FER'RY-ING.] I. t. To convey over water on a boat; cross in a boat or float. II. i. To cross water, as in a boat. [< AS. ferian, carry, go.]

fer'ry, n. [FER'RIES^{Z}, pl.] 1. A system of transportation across a narrow body of water; also, the place of crossing. 2. The legal right to maintain such an establishment and to charge toll. 3. A boat for such transportation. fer'ry-boat"‡.—fer'ry-man, n. One who has charge of a ferry.

Fer"ry', 1 fe"rī'; 2 fĕ"ry', Jules (1832–1893). A French lawyer; statesman: twice Premier.

fer'til(e^{S}), 1 fûr'tıl; 2 fĕr'tĭl, a. 1. Producing, or capable of producing abundantly; fruitful or prolific; rich; productive; inventive. 2. Reproducing or capable of reproducing. 3. Bot. (1) Bearing or capable of producing fruit. (2) Capable of fertilizing or of being fertilized, as perfect anthers and pistils. (3) Productive of spore-bearing organs: said of ferns, etc. 4. Capable of growth or development; productive: said of seeds or eggs. 5. Causing or imparting productiveness; as, fertile rains. 6. Produced abundantly; plentiful. [< L. fictio(n-), < fictus, pp. of fingo, form.]

Syn.: allegory, apolog, fable, fabrication, falsehood, figment, invention, legend, myth, novel, romance, story. Fiction is now chiefly used of a prose work in narrative form in which the characters are partly or wholly imaginary, and which is designed to portray human life, with or without a practical lesson; a romance portrays what is picturesque or striking, as a mere fiction may not do; novel is a general name for any continuous fictitious narrative, especially a love-story; fiction and novel are used with little difference of meaning, except that novel characterizes a work in which the emotional element is especially prominent. The moral of the fable is expressed formally; the lesson of the fiction, if any, is inwrought. A fiction is studied; a myth grows up without intent. A legend may be true, but can not be historically verified; a myth has been received as true at some time, but is now known to be false. A fabrication is designed to deceive; it is a less odious word than falsehood, but is really stronger, as a falsehood may be a sudden unpremeditated statement, while a fabrication is a series of statements carefully studied and fitted together in order to deceive; the falsehood is all false; the fabrication may mingle the true with the false. A figment is something imaginary which the one who utters it may or may not believe to be true; we say, "That statement is a figment of his imagination." The story may be either true or false, and covers the various senses of all the words in the group. Apolog, a word simply transferred from Greek into English, is the same as fable. Compare ALLEGORY.—Ant.: certainty, fact, history, literalness, reality, truth, verity.

fierce, 1 fīrs; 2 fērç, a. 1. Having a violent and cruel fierse[2], nature or temper; savage; ferocious. 2. Violent in action; furious. 3. Vehement; passionate. [< F. fier, proud, < L. ferus, wild.]

Syn.: ferocious, fiery, furious, impetuous, raging, savage, uncultivated, untrained, violent, wild. Fierce signifies having a furious and cruel nature, or being in a furious and cruel mood, more commonly the latter. It applies to that which is now intensely excited, or liable to intense and sudden excitement. Ferocious refers to a state or disposition; that which is fierce flashes or blazes; that which is ferocious steadily burns; we speak of a ferocious animal, a fierce passion. A fiery spirit with a good disposition is quickly excitable in a good cause, but may not be fierce or ferocious. Savage signifies untrained, uncultivated. Ferocious always denotes a tendency to violence; it is more distinctly bloodthirsty than the other words; a person may be deeply, intensely cruel, and not at all ferocious: a ferocious countenance expresses habitual ferocity; a fierce countenance may express habitual fierceness, or only the sudden anger of the moment. That which is wild is simply unrestrained; the word may imply no anger or harshness; as wild delight, wild alarm. See ARDENT; GRIM.—Ant.: affectionate, docile, gentle, harmless, kind, mild, patient, peaceful, submissive, sweet, tame, tender.

Greenfinch. 1/5

Syn.: beautiful, clarified, clear, comminuted, dainty, delicate, elegant, excellent, exquisite, gauzy, handsome, keen, minute, nice, polished, pure, refined, sensitive, sharp, slender, slight, small, smooth, splendid, subtile, subtle, tenuous, thin. Fine (L. finis, end) denotes that which has been brought to a full end, finished. From this root-sense many derived meanings branch out, causing words quite remote from each other to be alike synonyms of fine. That which is truly finished, brought to an ideal end, is excellent of its kind, and beautiful, if a thing that admits of beauty; as, a fine house, fine trees, a fine woman, a fine morning; if a thing that admits of the removal of impurities, it is not finished till these are removed, and hence fine signifies clarified, clear, pure, refined; as, fine gold. That which is finished is apt to be polished, smooth to the touch, minutely exact in outline; hence fine comes to be a synonym for all words like dainty, delicate, exquisite; as, fine manners, a fine touch, fine perceptions. As that which is delicate is apt to be small, by an easy extension of meaning fine becomes a synonym for slender, slight, minute, comminuted; as, a fine thread, fine sand; or for filmy, tenuous, thin; as, a fine lace, fine wire; and as a thin edge is keen, sharp, fine becomes also a synonym for these words; as, a fine point, a fine edge. Compare BEAUTIFUL; EXCELLENT; MINUTE; TASTEFUL.—Ant.: big, blunt, clumsy, coarse, great, heavy, huge, immense, large, rude, stout, thick.

Syn.: accomplish, achieve, bring to an end, close, complete, conclude, elaborate, end, get done, perfect, polish, put an end to, terminate. In addition to its meaning of bringing to an end, by which it is synonymous with close, complete, conclude, end, terminate, etc., finish has come to denote the bringing to perfection of every minutest detail, especially of superficial elegance, refinement, or beauty, and is thus a close synonym of elaborate, perfect, polish, etc., as in the expression "to add the finishing touches." Compare END, v.—Ant.: commence, enter upon, found, inaugurate, initiate, institute, make a beginning, open, originate, set about, start, undertake. Compare synonyms for BEGINNING.

flown, a. 1. Coated, as a glaze, with color freely blended or flowed. 2. Naut. Eased off; slack, as a sheet. 3†. Flooded; steeped. [< AS. flōwen, pp. of flōwan, flow.]

flox'-silk"§, n. Same as FLOSS-SILK.

F. L. S., abbr. Fellow of the Linnæan Society. [flue‡.

flu, 1 flū; 2 flu, n. [Colloq.] Influenza: a popular contraction.

flub'dub, 1 flŭb'dŭb; 2 flŭb'dŭb, n. Drivel: twaddle; flapdoodle.—flub-dub'ber-y, n. The act or process of producing flubdub; also flubdub collectively.

fluc'tu-ate, 1 fluk'chu-āt; 2 flŭc'chu-āt, vt. & vi. [-AT'ED[d]; -AT'ING.] 1. To move, or cause to move, like waves; undulate. 2. To pass backward and forward irregularly from one state to another; waver; oscillate. [< L. fluctuatus, pp. of fluctuo, < fluctus, wave.]

Syn.: hesitate, oscillate, swerve, undulate, vacillate, vary, veer, waver. To fluctuate (L. fluctus, a wave) is to move like a wave with alternate rise and fall. A pendulum oscillates; waves fluctuate or undulate; a light or a flame wavers; a frightened steed swerves from his course; a tool or weapon swerves from the mark or line; the temperature varies; the wind veers when it suddenly changes its direction. That which veers may steadily hold the new direction; that which oscillates, fluctuates, undulates, or wavers returns upon its way. As regards mental states, he who hesitates sticks (L. hærere) on the verge of decision; he who wavers does not stick to a decision; he who vacillates decides now one way, and now another; one vacillates between contrasted decisions or actions; he may waver between decision and indecision, or between action and inaction. Persons hesitate, vacillate, waver; feelings fluctuate or vary. Compare SHAKE.—Ant.: abide, adhere, hold fast, persist, stand fast, stay, stick.—fluc'tu-a-bil'i-ty, n.—fluc'tu-a-bl(e), a.—fluc'tu-ant, a. 1. Med. Showing fluctuation, as a tumor. 2. Moving or shaped like a wave.—fluc'tu-a'tion, n. Frequent irregular change; varying movement or action; also, a rising and falling, as of prices.

flue[1], 1 flū; 2 flu, n. 1. A channel or passage for smoke, air, or gases of combustion; a chimney. 2. An organ-pipe of flute or diapason quality. 3. A fishing-net of various designs.

flew†. [Cp. OF. flue, a flowing.]

flue[2], n. Any fine flock-like refuse of wool or the like; lint. [Cp. F. flou, light, < G. flau, weak.]

flue[3], n. A fluke; barb, as of a harpoon, feather, or anchor.

flue[4]§, n. Influenza.

flu'ent, 1 flū'ent; 2 flu'ĕnt, a. 1. Ready in speaking or writing; voluble; copious. 2. Marked by fluency; flowing; smooth. 3. Flowing freely; mobile; changeable. [< L. fluen(t-)s, ppr. of fluo, flow.]—flu'en-cy, n. The quality of being fluent; readiness and ease of speech or expression. flu'ent-ness‡.—flu'ent-ly, adv.

flue'-pipe", 1 flū'-pīp"; 2 flu'-pīp", n. A flipped organ-pipe, as distinguished from a reed-pipe.

flue'y, 1 flū'i; 2 flu'i, a. Containing or like flue; downy; fluffy.

fluff[1], 1 fluf; 2 flŭf, vi. To move in such a way as to cause a puffing out; become fluffy.

fluff[2], vt. & vi. To burn suddenly while not under pressure; flash; as, to fluff gunpowder on a plate.—fluffed l' the pan [Scot.], flashed in the pan. See FLASH.

fluff[3], n. 1. Nap or down. 2. Anything downy or fluffy. [Cp. FLUE, n.]—fluff'y, a. [FLUFF'I-ER; FLUFF'I-EST.] Downy; feathery.—fluff'i-ness, n.

fluff[3], n. A flash, as of loose powder; puff. [Imitative.]—fluff's-glb", n. [Scot.] A squib.

flu'id, 1 flū'id; 2 flu'id. I. a. Capable of flowing; liquid or gaseous. II. n. A substance that yields to any force tending to change its form; a liquid or gas. [< L. fluidus, < fluo, flow.]

Syn.: gas, liquid. A fluid is a substance that, like air or water, yields to any force that tends to change its form; a liquid is a body in that state in which the particles move freely among themselves, but remain in one mass, keeping the same volume, but taking always the form of the containing vessel; a liquid is an inelastic fluid; a gas is an elastic fluid that tends to expand to the utmost limits of the containing space. All liquids are fluids, but not all fluids are liquids; air and all the gases are fluids, but they are not liquids under ordinary circumstances, even if capable of being reduced to a liquid form by special means, as by cold and pressure. Water at the ordinary temperature is at once a fluid and a liquid.—Ant.: solid.—fluid dram or f. drachm, see under DRAM.—f. extract, a concentrated alkaloidal extract of a vegetable drug.—f. ounce, see under OUNCE[1], n.—f. pressure, see under PRESSURE, n.—flu'id-al, a. Of or pertaining to a fluid; fluid-like. flu-id'ic‡.—flu-id'i-ty, n. The state or quality of being fluid. flu'id-ness‡.

fluke[1], 1 flūk; 2 fluk, n. 1. The part of an anchor that holds to the ground. 2. One of the lobes of the tail of a whale. 3. A barb on a harpoon, arrow, etc. 4. A flunk: said of a kick in football. [Perhaps < G. flunk, fluke, wing.]

fluke[2], n. 1. A leaf-like parasitic worm infesting sheep, and also man and other animals. 2. [Brit.] A flatfish or flounder. [< AS. floc, plaice.]—fluke'worm", n. Same as FLUKE[2], n., 1.

fluke[3], n. [Slang.] 1. A lucky stroke or accident, as in billiards, etc. 2. A failure; disappointment.—fluk'y, a. 1. Occurring by lucky chance. 2. Variable; capricious, as wind. fluk'ey‡.

flume, 1 flūm; 2 flum, vt. [FLUMED; FLUM'ING.] 1. Mining. To drain away or divert by means of a flume. 2. To move by means of a flume.

flume, n. 1. A conduit, as for a mill-wheel. 2. A narrow passage through which a torrent passes. 3. A chute. [< L. OF flumen, river.] Syn.: see STREAM.

flu'mi-nous, 1 flū'mi-nus; 2 flu'mi-nŭs, a. Of or pertaining to rivers; watered by streams. [< L. flumen (flumin-), river.]

flum'mer-y[1], 1 flum'ər-i; 2 flŭm'er-y, n. [-IES[z], pl.] 1. A light dish made of flour or corn-starch; blanc-mange. 2. A glutinous refuse product of the manufacture of wheat-starch. 3. Originally, a dish of oatmeal steeped in water and turned sour; pap. [< W. llymru, flummery.]

flum'mer-y[2], n. Anything vapid or insipid; empty compliment; flimsy show; humbug. [Colloq.] I. vt. & vi. To throw down heavily or clumsily; flop; plump. II. n. The act of flumping or the sound so produced. [Onomatopoetic.]

flung, 1 flŭng; 2 flŭng, imp. & pp. of FLING, v.

flunk[1], 1 flŭnk; 2 flŭnk, v. [Slang, U. S.] I. t. 1. To make a failure of. 2. To cause to fail. II. i. To break down or back out; fail utterly. [A form of FUNK; cp. Old Flem. fonck, agitation.]

flunk, n. [Slang, U. S.] A complete failure; a giving up.

flunk'y, } 1 flŭn'ki; 2 flŭn'ky, n. [FLUNK'IES[z], FLUNK'EYS[z], flunk'ey, } pl.] 1. An obsequious fellow; servile imitator; toady. 2. [Colloq.] A servant in livery. [Allied to FLANK, v.]—flunk'y-ism, n.

flu"o-phos'phate, 1 flū"o-fos'fēt; 2 flu"o-fŏs'fāt, n. A double salt of hydrofluoric and phosphoric acids.

flu'or, n. Same as FLUORITE.—flu'or-an. n. Chem. A crystalline anhydrid ($C_{26}H_{12}O_3$), fluorescing in solution, formed as a by-product in making phenolphthalein. flu'or-ane‡.

flu"or-ap'a-tite, 1 flū"ər-ap'ə-tait; 2 flu"or-ăp'a-tit, n. Mineral. A patite in which fluorin but little or no chlorin is present.

FLOWERS.

1. Lilac. 2. Carnation. 3. Narcissus. 4. Daisy. 5. Harebell. 6. Morning-glory. 7. Mountain-laurel. 8. Honeysuckle. 9. Violet. 10. Calla-lily. 11. Sweet pea. 12. Forget-me-not. 13. Artichoke. 14. Pansy. 15. Easter lily. 16. Tulip. 17. Poppy. 18. Tiger-lily. 19. Crocus. 20. Orchid. 21. Touch-me-not. 22. Magnolia. 23. Water-lily. 24. Cultivated rose. 25. Wild rose. 26. Iris. 27. Hyacinth.

flu"o-resce', 1 flū"o-res'; 2 flų"o-rĕs', vi. [-RESCED'†; -RESC'ING.] Physics. To become fluorescent; exhibit fluorescence.

flu"o-res'ce-in, 1 flū"o-res'ı-in; 2 flų"o-rĕs'e-ın, n. Chem. A dark-red crystalline compound ($C_{20}H_{12}O_5$), obtained by heating phthalic anhydrid with resorcin at 200° C., and subsequent separation; also, any of several similar compounds. flu"o-res'-ce-ine†.

flu"o-res'cence, 1 flū"o-res'ens; 2 flų"o-rĕs'ĕnç, n. The power by which some substances, when illuminated, give off light of a color differing from their own; also, the light so given off.—flu"o-res'cent, a. Showing or produced by fluorescence.—fluorescent lamp, an electric lamp having a glass globe whose inner sides are covered with a fluorescent substance.

flu-or'ic, 1 flū-or'ık; 2 flų-ŏr'ĭc, a. Chem. Pertaining to, derived from, or containing fluorin.

flu'o-rid, } 1 flū'o-rid, -rıd or -ruid; 2 flų'o-rid, -rĭd or -rid, n.
flu'o-ride, } Chem. A binary compound of fluorin: sometimes regarded as a salt of hydrofluoric acid.

flu'o-rin, } 1 flū'o-rin, -rın or -rin; 2 flų'o-rin, -rĭn or -rĭn, n. flu'o-rine, } Chem. A pale-greenish gaseous element belonging to the halogen family. It is similar to chlorin, but much more active. See ELEMENT.

flu'or-ite, 1 flū'or-ait; 2 flų'ŏr-ĭt, n. A cleavable, isometric, variously colored calcium fluorid (CaF_2). [LL., < L. fluo, flow.]

flu'or'or'; flu'or-spar†.

flu'or-o-scope, 1 flū'or-o-skōp; 2 flų'ŏr-o-scōp, n. A device for observing, by means of some fluorescent substance, the shadows of objects enclosed in media opaque to ordinary light, but transparent to Roentgen rays. [< FLUOR + -SCOPE.]—flu"or-o-scop'ic, a.—flu'or-os'co-py, n. Examination conducted by means of a fluoroscope.

flu'or-spar", 1 flū'or-spēr"; 2 flų'ŏr-spăr", n. Same as FLUORITE.

flu"o-sil'i-cate, n. Chem. A salt of hydrofluosilicic acid; also, by extension, in mineralogy, a silicate containing fluorin.—flu"o-si-lic'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing fluorin and silicon.—fluosilicic acid, a colorless suffocating gaseous compound ($SiF_4.2HF$) formed by the action of hydrofluoric acid on silica.

flur'ry, 1 flur'ı; 2 flŭr'y. I. vt. [FLUR'RIED; FLUR'RY-ING.] To bewilder or confuse; agitate; fluster. II. n. [FLUR'-RIES", pl.] 1. A sudden commotion; nervous agitation. 2. Flutter; hurry. 3. A light gust of wind. 4. Whaling. The spasmodic contortions of a dying whale. [< Sw. flurig, disordered.] SYN.: see TUMULT.

flush[1], 1 flush; 2 flŭsh, vt. & vi. 1. To cause to color, as with a rush of blood; redden. 2. To grow red in the face; become overspread with color. [< Sw. dial. flossa, burn.]

flush[2], vt. & vi. 1. To deluge or be filled with water; wash-out. 2. To flood intermittently. [Perhaps of OD. origin.]

flush[2], n. The act of flushing a bird; a bird or birds startled from cover.

flush[3], n. In poker, cribbage, or piquet, a hand of cards all of one suit. [< L. OF fluxus, a flow.]

flush[4], n. A sudden gush or rush of water.

flush[5], n. 1. Abundance. 2. [Prov. Eng.] A large number. [< FLUSH[3], n.] flush[6], n. A surface which is flush.

flush, adv. 1. With level, unbroken surface or form. 2. In a direct manner; squarely; straight.

Flush'ing, 1 flush'ıŋ; 2 flŭsh'ĭng, n. A fortified seaport (pop. 22,000) of the Netherlands, on the English Channel.

flus'ter, 1 flus'tər; 2 flŭs'tĕr. I. vt. & vi. 1. To throw into a confused state; confuse; flurry: intoxicate 2§. To be or become flurried, heated, or agitated. II. n. Confusion of mind; flurry; intoxication. [< Ice. flaustra, be flustered.]

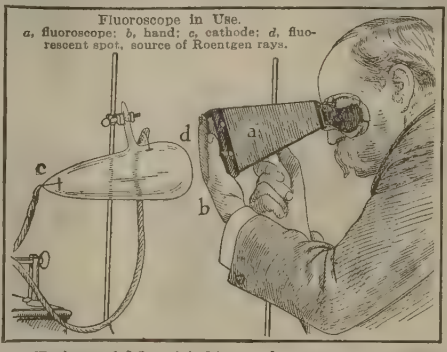
flus'trate, 1 flus'trēt; 2 flŭs'trāt, vt. [FLUS'TRAT-ED[4]; FLUS'TRAT-ING.] [Colloq.] To fluster; befuddle. flus'ter-ate†.—flus"ter-a'tion, flus-tra'tion, n. The act or condition of being flustered.

flute, 1 flūt; 2 flųt, v. [FLUT'ED[4]; FLUT'ING.] I. t. 1. To play, sing, or utter with flute-like tones. 2. To corrugate; crimp. II. i. To play on a flute; make a flute-like sound.—flut'ed, pa. 1. Exhibiting parallel grooves or flutes. 2. Having the tone of a flute.—flut'ing, n. 1. A flute or groove; flutes or grooves collectively: fluted work. 2. A crimp, as in a woman's ruffle. 3. The act of making a flute, as by carving a column.



Fluoroscope in Use.
a, fluoroscope; b, hand; c, cathode; d, fluorescent spot, source of Roentgen rays.

flute, n. 1. A tubular wind-instrument of small diameter with holes along the sides. 2. A flute-stop in an organ; flue. 3. A groove, usually of semicircular section, as in a column, also, a corrugation; crimping. [F.]—flut'er, n. 1. One who plays the flute. 2. One who makes fluted work.—flut'ist, n. A flute-player.—flut'y, a. Resembling a flute in tone.

flut'ter, 1 flut'ər; 2 flŭt'ĕr, v. I. t. 1. To cause to move rapidly and irregularly to and fro; agitate; vibrate. 2. To throw into an agitated state; flurry; fluster. II. i. 1. To vibrate with rapid irregular motions; be agitated; as, fans flutter; his pulse fluttered feebly. 2. To make the wings vibrate rapidly. 3. To behave with levity or inconstancy; trifle. 4. To quiver or tremble with excitement or uncertainty. [< AS. flotorian (freq.); cp. FLOAT, v.] SYN.: see FLAUNT; SHAKE.—flut'ter-er, n.—flut'ter-ing-ly, adv.—flut'ter-y, a. Inclined to flutter; wavering.

flut'ter, n. 1. The act of fluttering. 2. Agitation; confused or tumultuous emotion.

flu'vi-al, 1 flū'vı-al; 2 flų'vi-al, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or formed by a river. 2. Existing in a river. [< L. fluvialis, < fluvius, river.] flu'vi-at'ı†; flu'vi-a-til(eš†.

flu'vi-o-, 1 flū'vı-o-; 2 flų'vi-o-. From Latin fluvius, river (see FLUVIAL): a combining form.—flu'vi-o-graph, n. A mechanical contrivance for measuring the rise and fall of a river.—flu"vi-o-ma-rine', a. Geol. Formed by or pertaining to the joint action of the sea and in flowing streams, as delta deposits.

flux, 1 fluks; 2 flŭks. I. vt. & vi. 1. To melt or make fluid. 2. To purge. 3. To treat with a flux, as in welding. 4§. To flow; move. II. n. 1. A continuous flowing. 2. The act or process of melting. 3. Med. A morbid discharge of fluid matter. 4. A substance that promotes the fusing of minerals or metals. 5. Physics. The rate of flow or transfer of water, heat, electricity, etc. 6. Any readily fusible glass or enamel used as a base or ground in ceramic work. 7. A state of constant movement; as, the flux of the tide. [F., < L. fluxus, < fluo, flow.]

SYN.: see STREAM.—bloody flux, dysentery.—flux density (Elec.), the induction of lines of force per unit section.—flux-a'tion, n. The act or process of flowing; flux.

flux'ion, 1 fluk'shan; 2 flŭk'-shon, n. 1. The act of flowing or melting; that which flows or melts. 2. Math. The rate of flow or variation of a changing quantity. 3. Med. A morbid determination of blood to any one organ.—flux'ion-al, a. 1. Math. Of or pertaining to fluxions. 2§. Of a nature to flow.—flux'ion-al-ly, adv. flux'ion-a-ry†.

flux'ıvet, a. 1. Flowing with tears. 2. Variable; inconstant.

fly, 1 flaı; 2 flȳ, v. [FLEW; FLOWN; FLY'ING.] I. i. 1. To cause to float or rise in or move through the air. 2. To cause to take flight; as, to fly an air-plane; to fly pigeons. 3. To get swiftly away or escape from; flee from; avoid; shun; as, to fly the face of a foe. 4§. To attack or hunt by flight, as of a hawk.

[< AS. foda.]

Syn.: aliment, diet, fare, feed, fodder, forage, nourishment, nutriment, nutrition, pabulum, provender, regimen, sustenance, viands, victuals. Food is, in the popular sense, whatever one eats in contradistinction to what one drinks. Thus, we speak of "food and drink," of wholesome, unwholesome, or indigestible food; in a more scientific sense, whatever, when taken into an organism, serves to build up structure or supply waste may be termed food; thus, we speak of liquid food, plant food, etc.; in this wider sense food is closely synonymous with nutriment, nourishment, and sustenance. Victuals is a plain, homely word for whatever may be eaten; we speak of choice viands, cold victuals. Diet refers to the quantity and quality of food habitually taken, with reference to preservation of health. Regimen considers food as taken by strict rule, in which use it is closely synonymous with diet, but applies more widely to the whole ordering of life. Fare is a general word for all table supplies, good or bad; as, sumptuous fare; wretched fare. Feed, fodder, and provender are used only of the food of the lower animals, feed denoting anything consumed, but more commonly grain, fodder denoting hay, cornstalks, or the like, sometimes called "long feed"; provender is dry feed, whether grain or hay, straw, etc. Forage denotes any kind of food suitable for the horses and cattle, primarily as obtained by a military force in scouring the country, especially an enemy's country. Compare NUTRIMENT. —food'-vac"u-ole, n. A clear space in certain protozoans enclosing a particle of food in process of digestion.

1. The act, art, or science of fortifying. 2. A military defensive work; a fort. See illus. under BASTION. 3. A strengthening of any kind.

Syn.: castle, citadel, fastness, fort, fortress, stronghold. Fortification is the general word for any artificial defensive work; a fortress is a fortification of especial size and strength; a fortress is regarded as permanent, and is ordinarily an independent work; a fort or fortification may be temporary; a fortification may be but part of a defensive system; we speak of the fortifications of a city. A citadel is a fortification within a city, or the fortified inner part of a city, or fortress within which a garrison may be placed to overawe the citizens, or to which the defenders may retire if the outer works are captured; the medieval castle was the fortified residence of a king or baron. Fort is the common military term for a detached fortified building or enclosure of moderate size occupied or designed to be occupied by troops. The fortifications of a modern city usually consist of a chain of forts. Any defensible place, whether made so by nature or by art, is a fastness or stronghold. See RAMPART.

Syn.: favored, happy, lucky, prospered, prosperous, successful. A man is successful in any case if he achieves or gains what he seeks; he is known as a successful man if he has achieved or gained worthy objects of endeavor; he is fortunate or lucky if advantages have come to him without or beyond his direct planning or achieving. Lucky is the more common and colloquial, fortunate the more elegant word; fortunate is more naturally applied to the graver matters, as we speak of the fortunate rather than the lucky, issue of a great battle; lucky more strongly emphasizes the element of chance, as when we speak of a lucky hit, a lucky guess, or of one as "born under a lucky star." Favored is used in a religious sense, implying that one is the object of divine favor. Happy, in this connection, signifies possessed of the means of happiness. One is said to be happy or prosperous whether his prosperity be the result of fortune or of achievement; prospered rather denotes the action of a superintending Providence. See AUSPICIOUS; HAPPY.—Ant.: broken, crushed, fallen, illstarred, miserable, unfortunate, unhappy, unlucky, woful, wretched.

Syn.: artifice, cheat, cheating, deceit, deception, dishonesty, duplicity, imposition, imposture, swindle, swindling, treachery, treason, trick. A fraud is an act of deliberate deception with the design of securing something by taking unfair advantage of another. A deceit or deception may be designed merely to gain some end of one's own, with no intent of harming another; an imposition, to take some small advantage of another, or simply to make another ridiculous. An imposture is designed to obtain money, credit, or position to which one is not entitled, and may be practised by a street beggar or by the pretender to a throne. All action that is not honest is dishonesty, but the term dishonesty is generally applied in business, politics, etc., to deceitful practises which are not distinctly criminal. Fraud includes deceit, but deceit may not reach the gravity of fraud; a cheat is of the nature of fraud, but of a petty sort; a swindle is more serious than a cheat, involving larger values and more flagrant dishonesty. Fraud is commonly actionable at law; cheating and swindling are for the most part out of the reach of legal proceedings. Compare ARTIFICE; DECEPTION; TREACHERY. —Ant.: fairness, good faith, honesty, integrity, truth, uprightness. —fraud'ful, a. Abounding in fraud; fraudulent. -ly, adv. —fraud'less, a. -ly, adv. -ness, n. —fraud'u-lent, a. Proceeding from, characterized by, or practising fraud. friend'ly, 1 frend'li; 2 frēnd'ly, a. 1. Pertaining to or like a friend; befitting friendship; amicable. 2. Propitious; favorable. Syn.: accessible, affable, affectionate, amicable, brotherly, companionable, complaisant, cordial, favorable, fond, genial, hearty, kind, kindly, loving, neighborly, sociable, social, tender, well-disposed. Friendly, as said of persons, signifies having the disposition of a friend; as said of acts, it signifies befitting or worthy of a friend. The adjective friendly does not reach the full significance of the nouns "friend" and "friendship"; one may be friendly to those who are not his friends, and to be in friendly relations often signifies little more than not to be hostile. Affable and accessible are distinctively used of public and eminent persons, who might, if disposed, hold themselves at a distance from others. Companionable and sociable refer to manner and behavior, cordial and genial express genuine kindliness of heart and warmth of feeling. We speak of a cordial greeting, a favorable reception, a neighborly call, a sociable visitor, an amicable settlement, a kind interest, a friendly regard, a hearty welcome. The Saxon friendly is stronger than the Latin amicable. Fond is commonly applied to an affection that becomes, or at least appears, excessive. Affectionate, devoted, and tender are almost always used in a high and good sense; as, an affectionate son; a devoted friend; "the tender mercy of our God," Luke i, 78. See AMICABLE; GOOD; PROPITIOUS. Compare FRIENDSHIP.—Ant.: adverse, alienated, antagonistic, belligerent, cold, contentious, disaffected, distant, estranged, frigid, hostile, ill-disposed, indifferent, inimical, unfriendly, unkind, warlike.

friend'ship, 1 frend'ship; 2 frēnd'ship, n. 1. Mutual regard cherished by kindred minds. 2. The state or fact of being friends. 3. An act of friendly assistance; aid; relief.

Syn.: affection, amity, attachment, comity, consideration, devotion, esteem, favor, friendliness, good will, love, regard. Friendship is a deep, quiet, enduring affection, founded upon mutual respect and esteem. Friendship is always mutual; one may have friendly feelings toward an enemy, but while there is hostility or coldness on one side there can not be friendship between the two. Friendliness is a quality of friendly feeling, without the deep and settled attachment implied in the state of friendship. Comity is mutual kindly courtesy, with care of each other's right, and amity a friendly feeling and relation not necessarily implying special friendliness; as, the comity of nations, or amity between neighboring countries. Affection may be purely natural; friendship is a growth. Friendship is more intellectual and less emotional than love; it is easier to give reasons for friendship than for love; friendship is more calm and quiet, love more fervent, often rising to intensest passion; friendship implies some degree of equality, while love does not; one may have love for an inferior or an enemy. Compare ACQUAINTANCE; ASSOCIATION; ATTACHMENT; LOVE.—Ant.: see synonyms for BATTLE; ENMITY; FEUD; HATRED.—Prep.: the friendship of one person for or toward another, or the friendship between them.

Syn.: (noun) affright, dismay, dread, fear, horror, panic, terror. Affright, fright, and terror are always sudden, and in actual presence of that which is terrible; fear may be controlled by force of will; fright and terror overwhelm the will; terror paralyzes; fright may cause wild or desperate action. Fright is largely a matter of the nerves; fear of the intellect and the imagination; terror of all the faculties, bodily and mental. Panic is a sudden fear or fright, affecting numbers at once; vast armies or crowded audiences are liable to panic upon slight occasion. In a like sense we speak of a financial panic. Compare ALARM; FEAR.

—fright'en, vt. To throw into a state of fear or fright; alarm suddenly; terrify; scare.

Syn.: affright, alarm, appal, browbeat, cow, daunt, dismay, intimidate, scare, terrify. One is frightened by a cause of fear addressed directly and suddenly to the senses; he is intimidated by an apprehension of contingent consequences dependent on some act of his own to be done or forborne; the means of intimidation may act through the senses, or may appeal only to the intellect or the sensibilities. The sudden rush of an armed madman may frighten; the quiet leveling of a highwayman's pistol intimidates. A savage beast is intimidated by the keeper's whip. Employers may intimidate their employees from voting contrary to their will by threat of discharge; a mother may be intimidated through fear for her child. To browbeat or cow is to bring into a state of submissive fear; to daunt is to give pause or check to a violent, threatening, or even a brave spirit. To scare is to cause sudden, unnerving fear; to terrify is to awaken fear that is overwhelming. To appal (literally to make pale) is to overcome momentarily by some staggering or chilling fear or shocked repugnance; to dismay (literally to deprive of power) is to cause a sinking fear, make faint with dread or terror. Compare ALARM; FRIGHT.

—fright'ened, pa. Terrified; alarmed.—fright'en-er, n. One who or that which frightens.—fright'ful, a. Apt to induce terror; shocking. SYN.: alarming, appalling, awful, direful, dreadful, fearful, hideous, horrible, horrid, portentous, shocking, terrible, terrific, terrifying. Syn.: economy, miserliness, parsimoniousness, parsimony, providence, prudence, saving, scrimping, sparing, thrift. Economy is a wise and careful administration of the means at one's disposal: frugality is a withholding of expenditure, or sparing of supplies or provision, to a noticeable and often to a painful degree: parsimony is excessive and unreasonable saving for the sake of saving. Frugality exalted into a virtue to be practised for its own sake, instead of as a means to an end, becomes the vice of parsimony. Miserliness is the denying oneself and others the ordinary comforts or even necessaries of life, for the mere sake of hoarding money. Prudence and providence look far ahead, and sacrifice the present to the future, saving as much as may be necessary for that end. (See PRUDENCE.) Thrift seeks not merely to save, but to earn. Economy manages, frugality saves, providence plans, thrift at once earns and saves, with a view to wholesome and profitable expenditure at a fitting time. See ABSTINENCE.—Ant.: abundance, bounty, extravagance, liberality, luxury, opulence, riches, waste, wealth.—fru'gal-ly, adv. [< L. frux, fruit, + fero, bear.]

Syn.: vegetable. In the botanical sense, not only apples, pears, peaches, tomatoes, figs, etc., but all berries, nuts, grains, beans, peas, pumpkins, squashes, cucumbers, and melons, as well as pine-cones, the samaras or winged seeds of the maple, ash, or elm, and many other products, are fruits. Popular usage has, however, become much narrower. The grains have been dropped, and the tendency is to drop nuts also, so that a fruit is now generally understood to be the fleshy and juicy product of some plant, usually tree or shrub (and nearly always containing the seed), which, when ripe, is edible without cooking, and adapted for use as a dessert rather than as a salad. The quince, however, while usually cooked before eating, is classed among fruits, and we sometimes speak of poisonous fruits, as the berries of the nightshade. A vegetable, in the popular sense, is any part of a herbaceous plant commonly used for culinary purposes, and may consist of the root, as in the beet and turnip; the stem, as in the asparagus, celery, and rhubarb (or pie-plant); a tuber, or underground stem, as in the potato; the foliage, as in cabbage and spinach, or of that which is botanically the fruit, as in the tomato, bean, pea, and eggplant. Thus the tomato is botanically a fruit, but for table use and in the garden and market it ranks as a vegetable. "The fruits of certain low-growing perennial plants are specifically termed by horticulturists 'small fruits,' including the strawberry, raspberry, blackberry, gooseberry, currant, huckleberry, and cranberry. The term includes grapes, but excludes cherries." CROZIER Dict. of Bot. Terms. Syn.: see HARVEST; PRODUCT.

(2) Universal, or applicable to all the known individuals, whether facts, objects, actions, or judgments, within a given group or class. In this sense general is used in official titles commonly but illogically written as compounds, the adjective being the last element, in imitation of French usage; as, attorney-general. 4. Usual or customary; as, one's general habit. 5. Viewed all together, or as a whole; taken all in all; as, one's general behavior.

gen'er-al, n. 1. Mil. (1) An officer who commands any body of troops not less than a brigade. (a) In the United States, the commander, subordinate to the President, of all the military forces. (b) In the British army, the commander of an army, usually next below a field-marshal. This grade is usually the highest except that of marshal or field-marshal. (2) A roll of the drum to call troops together. 2. A general principle or statement. 3. That which includes all of a class or kind; a whole; totality. 4.‖ The people or the public; the vulgar. [< L.ᵒғ generalis, of or belonging to a kind.]

Syn.: (adj.) common, commonplace, customary, everyday, familiar, frequent, habitual, normal, ordinary, popular, prevalent, public, universal, usual. Common signifies frequently occurring, not out of the regular course, not exceptional; hence, not above the average, not excellent or distinguished, inferior, or even low; common also signifies pertaining to or participated in by two or more persons or things; as, sorrow is common to the race. General may signify pertaining equally to all of a class, race, etc., but often signifies pertaining to the greater number, but not necessarily to all. Universal applies to all without exception; general applies to all with possible or comparatively slight exceptions; common applies to very many without deciding whether they are all, or even a majority. A common remark is one we often hear; a general experience is one that comes to the majority of people; a universal experience is one from which no human being is exempt. It is dangerous for a debater to affirm a universal proposition, since that can be negatived by a single exception, while a general statement is not invalidated even by adducing many exceptions. We say a common opinion, common experience, a general rule, general truth, a universal law. Compare COMMON; FREQUENT; HABITUAL; NORMAL; USUAL.—Ant.: exceptional, infrequent, odd, peculiar, queer, rare, singular, strange, uncommon, unfamiliar, unknown, unparalleled, unprecedented, unusual.

Syn.: bountiful, chivalrous, disinterested, free, free-handed, free-hearted, liberal, magnanimous, munificent, noble, open-handed, open-hearted. Generous (L. genus, a race) primarily signifies having the qualities worthy of noble or honorable birth; hence, free and abundant in giving, giving freely, heartily, and self-sacrificingly. As regards giving, generous refers rather to the self-sacrificing heartiness of the giver, liberal to the amount of the gift: a child may show himself generous in the gift of an apple, a millionaire makes a liberal donation; a generous gift, however, is commonly thought of as both ample and hearty. A munificent gift is vast in amount, whatever the motive of its bestowal. One may be free with another's money; he can be generous only with his own. Disinterested suggests rather the thought of one's own self-denial. One is magnanimous by a greatness of soul (L. magnus, great, and animus, soul) that rises above all that is poor, mean, or weak, and thus above resentment of injury or insult.—Ant.: avaricious, close, covetous, greedy, ignoble, illiberal, mean, miserly, niggardly, parsimonious, penurious, petty, rapacious, stingy.

—gen″er-os′i-ty, n. [-TIES², pl.] The quality of being generous; liberality; a generous act. Syn.: see BENEVOLENCE.—gen′er-ous-ly, adv.—gen′er-ous-ness, n.

Syn.: benefaction, bequest, boon, bounty, bribe, donation, grant, gratuity, largess, present, tip. A gift is in the popular, and also in the legal sense that which is voluntarily bestowed without expectation of return or compensation. Gift is now almost always used in the good sense, bribe always in the evil sense to signify payment for a dishonorable service under the semblance of a gift. A benefaction is a charitable gift, generally of large amount, and viewed as of enduring value, as an endowment for a college. A donation is something, perhaps of great, never viewed as of trivial value, given as to a cause or to a person representing a cause; as, a donation to a pastor. A gratuity is usually something of moderate value and is always given as to an inferior, and as of favor, not of right; as, a gratuity to a waiter: commonly called a tip. Largess is archaic for a bountiful gratuity, usually to be distributed among many, as among the heralds at ancient tournaments. A present is a gift of friendship, or conciliation, and given as to an equal or a superior. A boon is a gift that has been desired or craved or perhaps asked, or something freely given that meets some great desire. A grant is commonly considerable in amount and given by public authority; as, a grant of public lands for a college. Syn.: bestow, cede, communicate, confer, deliver, furnish, grant, impart, supply. To give is primarily to transfer to another's possession or ownership without compensation; in its secondary sense in popular use, it is to put into another's possession by any means and on any terms whatever; a buyer may say "Give mé the goods, and I will give you the money"; we speak of giving answers, information, etc., and often of giving what is not agreeable to the recipient, as blows, medicine, reproof; but when there is nothing in the context to indicate the contrary, give is always understood in its primary sense; as, this book was given me. Give thus becomes, like get, a term of such general import as to be a synonym for a wide variety of words. To grant is to put into one's possession in some formal way, or by authoritative act; as, Congress grants lands to a railroad corporation. Confer has a similar sense; as, to confer a degree or an honor; we grant a request or petition, but do not confer it. To impart is to give of that which one still, to a greater or less degree, retains; the teacher imparts instruction. To bestow is to give that of which the receiver stands in especial need: we bestow alms See ALLOT; CONVEY; SURRENDER.—Ant.: accept, assume, capture, choose, obtain, procure, receive, take.

Properly having the sense of acquired, procured, and the like, but improperly used to express mere possession. Not "The hound has got long ears," because he has done nothing to get them; he has them; but "He has got the rabbit" (which he has been chasing). I have got a pencil when I buy or find it. The form gotten, now partially restored to use after being almost obsolete, has the advantage of not being liable to such confusion. Those who would readily say "The man has got a heart," meaning simply "he has" one, would not think of saying "He has gotten a heart." Either got or gotten may be used when there has been a getting, but not otherwise.
